Mr. Deputy Speaker: Objection taken. Second Reading what day?

Mr. Corbyn: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I was not objecting to the Bill. I was moving——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The objection was recorded from elsewhere in the House.

Mr. Corbyn: I did not hear it, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Can you say where it came from?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The objection was taken from elsewhere in the House. Can the hon. Gentleman, on behalf of the hon. Member in charge of the Bill, name an alternative date?

Mr. Corbyn: Yes, indeed—Friday 4 July.

NOISE ABATEMENT BILL

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Objection taken. Second Reading what day?

Mr. Don Dixon (Jarrow): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I have introduced the Bill because I suffer from industrial deafness. The Bill seeks to end abuses, so that people will be able to hear properly. I did not hear the hon. Member who objected. Would it be possible, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for the hon. Member who objected to stand up, so that we can identify that half-baked individual?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I distinctly heard an objection made in some part of the House.

Mr. Dixon: I did not hear it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Gentleman is surely not that deaf. I also suffer from industrial deafness, but I can hear him.

Mr. Dixon rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am trying to explain the difficulty that the Chair is always in. The procedure followed today is no different from that followed regularly on Fridays since I have been a Member of Parliament. That is a matter——

Mr. Dixon rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman must contain himself. I was about to point out that the position of the Chair is no different from the position that it is always in when a Question is put that evokes a response. Hon. Members do not rise in their places to say Aye or Noe. If I followed the logic of the hon. Gentleman's argument, the Chair would have to ask hon. Members to stand in their places whenever the Question was put. That has never, to my recollection, been our practice.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I can take only one point of order at a time. We have merely followed the normal practice today.

Mr. Corbyn: Further to the point of order raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Jarrow (Mr. Dixon), Mr. Deputy Speaker. I do not doubt that you heard "Object" from somewhere in the Chamber. I am concerned, however, because I cannot see the lips of some hon. Members who are hidden by the Clerks' Table, who appear to sink deeper into the Benches as the afternoon passes.

Secondly, Mr. Deputy Speaker, would you accept that it would be perfectly possible for someone—a stranger or an intruder—to shout, "Object," and for there to be an echo that would even mislead you, Mr. Deputy Speaker? It would be much better and it would clear up any possible doubt or misunderstanding if the hon. Member who objects——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I have the hon. Gentleman's point, which is one that we have heard before. I think that he should have a little more faith in the judgment of the Chair than to think that I might inadvertently pick up as a genuine response an interjection that was made expressly outside the House.

It would help the Chair enormously if Members who wished to object were clearly to identify themselves by rising in their places, but the Chair has no power to require an hon. Member to do so. It has no more power to require that to happen on an occasion such as this than it has, for example, when there is a mid-week Second Reading, when voices are heard on both sides of the House, those interjections being made usually from a sedentary position. It would be unrealistic for the Chair to expect those hon. Members to rise in their places. The Chair is in a difficulty on such occasions and all that I can do is appeal to the House, as I have done previously, that those hon. Members who wish to take objection should do so loudly and clearly and should not be ashamed to identify themselves.

Mr. Corbyn rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Surely there is nothing more to the point of order.

Mr. Corbyn: I did not wish in any sense to impugn your judgment on this issue, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I am sure that it is correct. However, I think that justice should be seen to be done as well as being heard to be done. I draw your attention to early-day motion 814, Mr. Deputy Speaker, which attempts to protect Mr. Speaker from possible misunderstandings in this respect.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for his protection.

Mr. Ian Mikardo (Bow and Poplar): Would it be helpful, Mr. Deputy Speaker, if you suggested to the Whip on the Government Front Bench that he should get himself a cassette? That would save him a great deal of trouble.

Mr. Dixon: I was not trying to be funny, Mr. Deputy Speaker, when I intervened earlier, and I did not require any lectures on my hearing. I was explaining that I did not hear the objection. Surely it is only fair that Members who introduce Bills should have the right to hear and see those who object to them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I can only repeat that I heard an objection expressed in the House.

Second Reading what day?

Mr. Dixon: Friday 13 July. I might have more luck on that day.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Friday 13 June — [Interruption.] — 11 July. The hon. Gentleman has a disability which I share with him.

2.38 pm

Mr. Michael Hancock (Portsmouth, South): I have been trying for some months to draw the attention of the House to the case of one of my constituents. It is a case where a £75,000 loan, guaranteed under the small firms loan guarantee scheme, was spirited away from my constituent's bank account on the very day that it was credited to that account and paid over to another firm that promptly went into liquidation, with the result that £75,000 seemingly vanished into thin air, or possibly crossed the Channel to Jersey, with none of it ever being used for the purpose for which it was intended.

The Secretary of State has told us that, of over 16,000 loans granted under the guarantee scheme, "several thousand" have been lost in one way or another. In my constituent's case it seems likely that the way in which it was lost was by deliberate fraud. If the same applies to most of the other vanished loans, this amounts to a national scandal, of which the House should be made aware and about which the Government should be prepared to take action.

My constituent, who comes from India, had set up a company, registered under the name of Mogul Foods Ltd., to market canned foods intended especially for immigrants to this country from the Indian sub-continent. Broadly speaking, it was a business to market canned curry. The actual canning was done by contract. There was a surplus of canning capacity in Cornwall, where he was operating, so there was no point in acquiring a canning plant. However, he needed capital to enhance his marketing and distribution capabilities. That was the purpose for which he applied for a loan, and "marketing and distribution" was the official purpose for which the loan was granted.

The loan of £75,000 was approved by the Department of Trade and Industry, which authorised the National Westminster bank to make the money available. According to the bank statement, the money was credited to Mogul's account with the National Westminster bank at its Eastcheap branch in the City of London on 5 August 1982. On the same day, two cheques—one for £71,000 and the other for £6,032—payable to a firm called Backchurch Storage Ltd., which subsequently went into liquidation, were debited to Mogul's account. The larger cheque was in part payment for the lease of a canning plant and its equipment, most of which had been previously sold by Backchurch to another firm called Clarwill Leasing Company which, like Backchurch, was apparently a subsidiary of another company called Lusty Group.

The payment to Backchurch was made without the knowledge of my constituent, Mr. Varma, who was at the time—and still is—chairman and majority shareholder of Mogul Foods. The cheques were signed by a Mr. Richard Sale, who was both secretary of Mogul and a director of Backchurch. The bank's authority for making this payment has been questioned. In its own justification, the bank has produced a mandate which purports to bear Mr. Varma's signature authorising the signing of cheques by Mr. Sale and one other of a list of signatories. I say "purports", because Mr. Varma strongly disputes the authenticity of this mandate.

That leads me to the rather curious part played by the National Westminster bank in these transactions. I am not accusing the bank of fraud, but it looks as though it made a mistake in honouring the cheques signed by Mr. Sale, in view of the fact that the money was not being used for the purpose for which the loan was granted. Since then it appears to have been very busy covering up and attempting to justify this mistake. In doing so, it has made a number of self-contradictory statements. All that I need say here is that, before this case was drawn to my attention, it had been looked at by the hon. Member for Surrey, North-West (Mr. Grylls) in his capacity as chairman of the Small Business Bureau. In its letter to the hon. Member for Surrey, North-West, the bank's solicitors made three apparently trivial misstatements of fact that could hardly have been the result of carelessness.

I cannot say what the bank's purpose was. It gave the date on which the loan was credited to Mogul's account as 28 July 1982, and the date when the two cheques totalling £77,032 were debited was the same—28 July 1982. It would only have had to glance at Mogul's bank statement, a copy of which I have here, to see that 5 August was the date of both transactions. The solicitor's letter also stated that the purpose for which the loan had been granted was "manufacture and distribution." The form I have here from the Department of Trade and Industry, dated 7 June 1982, says again, quite unambiguously, that the purpose of the loan facility was

"capital injection to new business for marketing and distributing curried products."

In the second letter, Lord Boardman stated that he did not consider that the difference between the two purposes materially altered the bank's position. That was not the attitude of the National Westminster bank manager, who, according to correspondence in my possession, was worried that he had allowed the transaction to go through and went to considerable lengths to manufacture documentary justification after the event.

Before he approached me, my constitutent, Mr. Varma, had approached the City of London fraud squad, which reported that the Director of Public Prosecutions was unable to prosecute because of lack of evidence. I have recently written to the fraud squad again, asking whether the evidence that I have now is enough for it to proceed. I have clear documentary evidence to show that the equipment of the canning factory which Backchurch sold to Mogul Foods was not its to sell, as it had sold it the year before to the Clarwill Leasing and Discounting Company Ltd., which, like Backchurch, was a subsidiary of the Lusty Group, and which, also like Backchurch, subsequently went into liquidation.

I have this week had a reply from the police to my letter of 6 March 1986, in which I asked them to examine my evidence, which is not new but which they appear to have overlooked. Officers of the fraud squad have again interviewed Mr. Varma, apparently as a consequence of my letter. Since then he has had a letter from the assistant director of public prosecutions saying that further consideration has been given to the new evidence. The letter ends not by saying that the evidence is insufficient but with the odd statement "that the prosecution would not be appropriate".

My letter from the Commissioner of Police for the City of London strangely uses the same words. Mr. Varma tells me that the police officers told him that both the bank and its solicitors agreed that there had been a fraud, but both refused to assist the police in uncovering it.

This would not be a matter of national importance and not a matter to deserve the attention of this House if it were an isolated instance of fraud or an isolated instance of a bank's apparent irresponsibility. The fact that so many of these loans have ended by the lending bank having to invoke the guarantee and reclaim the loan from the Department of Trade and Industry strongly suggests that, sadly, the case of my constituent is not unique.

In correspondence with me and in statements to the House, the Secretary of State has taken the view that once a loan has been approved his responsibility is finished. From then on what happens to the money is a matter for the banks. The banks have taken the view that the actual use of the money is not their concern. Their responsibility remains to their shareholders. If the loan cannot be repaid, they can always reclaim most of it from the Department of Trade and Industry.

I have no intention of knocking the idea of the small firms guarantee loan scheme. On the contrary, part of my purpose in raising this matter today is to suggest that the Secretary of State should authorise a new loan to Mogul Foods, which has been left stranded without working capital by what has happened. There is certainly the possibility that the loans granted under the scheme are regarded by certain crooked financiers as easy game, as funds which, with a little bit of ingenuity, can be milked and diverted and perhaps end up in Jersey. A few subsidiaries can be set up, which sell off non-existent assets and then go into liquidation. The Secretary of State should examine the possibility that this is what is happening with a substantial proportion of other loans. We should ensure, where fraud seems likely, that they are properly investigated and the perpetrators prosecuted.

I draw to the attention of the House that written replies to me show that the sums so far invested in the small loans scheme amount to £150 million. There is a case to be answered. I hope that the House will seriously consider this case so that investigations can be carried out and the problems of Mogul Foods be properly sorted out. I hope that prosecutions will take place and that the way in which the small firms loan guarantee scheme is handled can be properly investigated.

2.50 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Employment (Mr. David Trippier): The hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) has raised a matter of great concern to one of his constituents, Mr. Varma. In 1982 Mogul Foods Ltd. obtained a loan of £75,000 for the development of its business from the National Westminster bank. That loan was facilitated by an 80 per cent. guarantee to the bank from the Department of Trade and Industry under the small firms loan guarantee scheme. In 1983 Mogul Foods Ltd. was unable to meet its obligations to the bank under the loan agreement and the bank accordingly called on the Department to honour its guarantee, which it did.

As hon. Members will be aware, my Department, the Department of Employment, is now responsible for the administration of the loan guarantee scheme, and it is therefore appropriate for me to reply to the points raised by the hon. Member. For convenience I shall refer to whichever Department was responsible for the administration of the scheme at the time. That is confusing because the sponsorship has moved from the Department of Trade and Industry to my Department. Whoever has been the Minister responsible for small firms has been the sponsoring Minister for the loan guarantee scheme.

The hon. Gentleman has pursued this matter with vigour and persistence on behalf of his constituent. I recognise that his intentions are commendable. I shall try to give him as detailed a reply as possible. I shall concentrate on those aspects of the case which directly involve the Department. I hope that the House will accept that we have dealt with the case properly and in good faith, within the limits of our powers and the available information.

Anyone who has read the correspondence arising from the case, which goes back over four years, will understand that the affair has caused a great deal of distress to Mr. Varma and his family. His hopes for his business have been dashed, his personal investment has been lost and a great deal of expense, time and anxiety has been incurred in pursuing the matter.

On a personal level, one is bound to feel sympathy for someone in Mr. Varma's position. Mr. Varma has made many serious allegations against various persons, some of which the hon. Gentleman referred to today. I emphasise that none of the allegations has been tested in the courts, in civil or criminal proceedings. As a result of the new information that has been drawn to my attention by the hon. Gentleman, that might now happen. It would certainly be interesting. Those against whom allegations have been made do not have the opportunity to put their side of the story and they are not represented here today. The House must bear that in mind.

Mr. Varma has been repeatedly advised that his grievances can be resolved only in the courts through a prosecution. I understand that Mr. Varma has brought his evidence to the attention of the police. We shall see what transpires as a result of the new evidence. So far, there have been no charges.

Mr. Hancock: On the accuracy or otherwise of the evidence, I should be interested to know whether the Minister could say whether his Department has attempted to contact the other people involved in the supposed fraud and, if so, what his Department's response was to discussions with the personalities involved.

Mr. Trippier: I shall endeavour to illustrate our position. The Department's responsibility is to deal with the bank, which was the lender in the first instance. I have no doubt that the bank has tried to contact the other individuals to whom the hon. Gentleman referred, but that is not a matter for my Department. We are interested in whether the loan was within the parameters—which are fairly broad—of the loan guarantee scheme under the existing rules.

It is not our responsibility to appraise applications when they are first brought to our attention. The hon. Gentleman would not seriously expect it to be. I do not want civil servants or Ministers to do the appraising. We leave that to the banks because they have the discipline and training necessary. That was the understanding when the scheme was introduced and I am content with that.

The hon. Gentleman referred to inaccuracies in letters from the National Westminster bank. It is unfortunate that such errors should confuse an already complicated matter, but I find it difficult to believe that the mistakes were deliberate. It is obvious that such mistakes would serve no purpose for the bank and would be easily detected.

Under the loan guarantee scheme, the Department provided at that time a guarantee of 80 per cent. on loans up to a maximum of £75,000. To ensure that the guaranteed loans were not just a soft option, borrowers were required to pay a premium to the Department of 3 per cent. on the guaranteed proportion of the loan. Guaranteed loans were available for most purposes and for most types of business, with some exceptions. The terms of the scheme have been modified from time to time, but the terms that I have described are those that were particularly relevant at the time.

Before outlining the facts concerning Mogul Foods, I must emphasise certain aspects of the scheme. From their inception, guaranteed loans have been loans by the banks and not by the Government. It is wrong to suggest that Government money is paid to the borrower. Government money is paid to the bank only if a claim is made on the guarantee. Moreover, there is only a partial guarantee. The bank shares the risk in the event of a default.

Decisions on the commercial aspects of lending are taken entirely by the banks. They decide whether a loan proposal is commercially viable, taking into account all the circumstances, including, of course, the availability of the guarantee. While the hon. Gentleman was right to say that the precise use made of the money applied for was changed, I told him in a parliamentary answer that the bank was responsible for notifying the Department of any change.

Mr. Hancock: I draw the Minister's attention to a letter from Lord Boardman, the chairman of National Westminster bank, who wrote:

"The Bank does not accept that Mr. Varma or Mogul Foods Limited have any grounds for complaint against the Bank."

Is the Minister saying that the banks have no obligation for the money and nor do the Government? Where is the responsibility for the way in which this public money is used?

Mr. Trippier: The responsibility is with the individuals who were parties to and signed the original application form. Perhaps that was the cause of Mr. Varma's undoing. When the application was submitted, it was clear that the other people named by the hon. Gentleman were directors of the company.

Any case that Mr. Varma has is against the other directors. He readily concedes that point in correspondence with me and I also have a copy of the letter that Lord Boardman sent to the hon. Gentleman. I believe that Lord Boardman is absolutely right.

In preparation for the debate, I had to check whether the bank had notified the Department that there was a change of use for the money being made available. That notification was sent to us and I have it in my file.

As I said, the Department forms no commercial judgment on the aspects of any project, but merely examines whether the application is eligible under the scheme. There is no doubt that this application was eligible and even the changed purposes fell within the scope.

The bank has to decide whether to seek repayment of the debt by means of liquidation, realisation of security or legal action. After any costs have been met, the proceeds of such action are split between the bank and the Department. The Department does not directly pursue the recovery of debts. That would be impracticable.

I assure the hon. Gentleman that in the three years during which I have been the sponsoring Minister of the scheme, I have never received correspondence such as that I have had with Mr. Varma. The hon. Gentleman said that he thought that such problems might be widespread, but I reject that view. A considerable number of loans have been made under the scheme, totalling £540 million, and claims on the guarantee have been relatively small, at about 20 per cent. That bears a favourable comparison with similar schemes on the continent and in the United States. We have never encountered such an issue previously, but I am satisfied that the bank acted within the rules and regulations of the scheme.

The scheme is extremely economical. A unit of about 10 people operate within the Department. As I have said, they issue guarantees on loans over the £500 million mark and settle claims of more than £100 million. That is an arbitrary figure, because obviously people who have borrowed money would still make a claim at some future stage. Those 10 people deal also with any complaints which arise, including—I am sure the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South will agree — protracted correspondence from Mr. Varma over a long period.

It is evident that the Department needs to consider only two issues in any particular case. First, is there a valid guarantee? Secondly, is there a valid claim? The Department will setlle any bona fide claim on a valid guarantee. The circumstances giving rise to a claim are normally quite irrelevant to the Department and it would be impractical to investigate them. Provided the borrower has defaulted on his obligations to the lender, whatever the reason, the lender will have a valid claim under the guarantee. Fraud or theft by the borrower, or by some third party, would not invalidate the claim. The only circumstances in which the Department would hesitate to honour a guarantee would be where it appeared that a claim might not be made in good faith, where, for instance, the bank had been a party to a fraud. Fortunately, that is a hypothetical case which has never arisen.

I turn again to the case of Mogul Foods Ltd. Fortunately, I can be brief, as the aspects of the case that concern the Department are quite limited. My information is derived from the documents relating to the guaranteed loan and from Mr. Varma's letters to the Department. In March 1982, Mogul Foods Ltd. prepared an application for the guaranteed loan. That was signed by Mr. Varma. The directors of the company were listed as Mr. Varma, Mr. Clive Hollands and Mr. Richard Sale. After processing the application, National Westminster bank forwarded it to the Department on 19 May 1982. The stated purpose of the loan was accurately described by the hon. Gentleman—

"Capital injection to new business for marketing and distributing curried products".

The Department checked that the application met the criteria for eligibility and issued a guarantee to the bank on 7 June 1982. Around the end of July, the bank credited Mogul Foods Ltd. with a £75,000 loan. It is not disputed that around the same time substantial payments were made by Mogul Foods Ltd to a company in the Lusty group called Backchurch Storage Ltd. However, Mr. Varma disputes several aspects of those payments. He argues, first, that the payments were not properly authorised by Mogul Foods Ltd. and that the bank was negligent in making the payments from Mogul's account. On this point, I must say that, in a letter to the Department in December 1982, Mr. Varma admitted that his fellow directors had full authority to sign cheques. It follows that the cheques for the disputed payments which were signed by Mr. Richard Sale were properly authorised. It is difficult to see how the bank can be fairly accused of negligence.

Secondly, Mr. Varma argues that he was unaware of these payments at the time. If true—I am not judge and jury—that is a criticism of his fellow directors. What seems clear is that at some stage Mr. Varma signed a contract on behalf of Mogul under which Mogul agreed to buy a factory and machinery from Backchurch Storage Ltd. Mr. Varma claims that this contract was signed later in the year, although it bears the date 30 July, and that he did not understand its contents. It is not my responsibility to form a view on that claim.

Thirdly, Mr. Varma argues that the assets acquired by Mogul were of little value and that the money was, in effect, misappropriated by the Lusty group, with which Mr. Sale was connected. Again, I do not sit as judge and jury on this, but I note that Mr. Varma's relationship with the Lusty group went back at least to March 1982 and that he appeared, at that time, to be satisfied with the manufacturing facilities which were part of the disputed contract.

At some stage after these transactions the bank manager became concerned that the loan facility had been used up so quickly. He sought an explanation from Mr. Sale and was told that the company had decided to purchase the manufacturing facilities rather than to hire them. He considered that this involved a change in the use of the loan and in October 1982 notified the Department of this change. The Department confirmed—I have seen a copy of that letter—that the change of use did not affect the validity of the guarantee. Mogul failed to make repayments on the due dates and, in March 1983, the bank claimed a sum of £51,516 under the terms of the guarantee, which the Department duly paid.

From these bare bones of the story, I think one point is reasonably clear. The Department and the bank both complied with all relevant rules and procedures of the scheme. There is on the face of it no reason to doubt that both the guarantee and the subsequent claim were entirely valid. For that reason, the Department has always explained that it has no locus to investigate this affair any further.

So far as I am aware there are no strong grounds for any accusation of negligence against the bank. Mr. Varma does not seem to have raised this suggestion until 1984. That is somewhat interesting in view of the time that had elapsed. Mr. Varma certainly started to make the suggestion in 1984. Certain of his later claims, especially about the authorisation of payments by Mogul, flatly contradict his earlier statements. Although I am not sitting as judge and jury on this matter, I admit that that certainly confused me. If Mr. Varma has any real grounds for that accusation, his means of redress is a civil action for negligence or breach of contract by the bank.

I am interested also in knowing whether Mr. Varma has sought to take legal action by going to a solicitor and being advised by him whether the case can be brought up—not necessarily under criminal proceedings but under civil proceedings. Mr. Varma certainly does not appear to have pursued that course. To be fair to the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South, new evidence may have come to light which throws a slightly different complexion on the matter. I should be grateful to the hon. Gentleman if he would grant me the privilege of seeing copies of the correspondence in his possession. I shall be happy to look again at the matter.

I have said repeatedly that I am not in a position to act as judge and jury on the rights and wrongs in what, as everyone would agree, is a complex dispute. Yet it seems to me that, even if the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South had new information, we would not intervene as a Department. It is not a matter that we could pursue through the administration of the loan guarantee scheme. I regret that Mr. Varma's business has failed and that National Westminster bank and the Department, and ultimately the taxpayer, have lost money. I hope that eventually Mr. Varma will be satisfied that he has been fairly treated by the Department and the bank. I am anxious for that to occur. I hope that the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South accepts that my Department has given the matter considerable attention. I look forward to hearing about the new information. I hope that at some stage—sooner rather than later—Mr. Varma will explore through the usual channels the possibility of legal action if he thinks that the case is justified.

Question put and agreed to.

PRIME MINISTER

EC (Budget)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister whether the Government is prepared to agree to an increase in the value added tax contribution to the European Economic Community budget in 1987.

The Prime Minister: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the 1·4 per cent. VAT limit. The Government see no case for raising this limit.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on co-ordination between the Department of the Environment, the Ministry of Defence and NIREX over the selection of, and consultations in connection with, sites for the disposal of civil and military nuclear waste.

The Prime Minister: The choice of site that may be suitable for the disposal of civil and defence nuclear waste rests with NIREX, as was the case with the sites announced by it on 25 February. In searching for sites NIREX approached a number of landowners, including the Ministry of Defence. Responsibility for the selection of a site solely for defence waste rests with the Ministry of Defence.

Libya (United States Raid)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister whether she will send a message conveying Her Majesty's Government's regret to Colonel Gaddafi for the killing of a member of his family by United States bombers launched from British soil; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: In my speech in the House on Wednesday 16 April, at column 875, I expressed my great sorrow at the civilian casualties in Libya. I also expressed my sorrow for the victims of terrorist acts performed at the Libyan Government's behest over many years.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister if she will call for a report from the British consul in the British interests section of the Italian embassy in Tripoli, giving particulars of buildings destroyed as a result of the American bombing attack on Tripoli; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I shall certainly wish to see an assessment of the damage to buildings in Tripoli. Her Majesty's consul is at present fully occupied in giving what assistace he can to the British community in Libya.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Students (Statistics)

Sir Peter Horden asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table showing the level of expenditure on student grants each year since 1978, and the number of students attending universities and polytechnics, taken separately in those years.

Mr. Walden: The information is shown in the following table. The figures cannot be directly compared since awards are for students from England and Wales studying anywhere in the United Kingdom, while student numbers include postgraduates, part-timers and overseas students.

Education Authorities

Mr. Cook asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will publish in the Official Report a table listing education authorities by teacher/pupil ratio in secondary schools, primary schools and overall for the latest year for which figures are available;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report the teacher/pupil ratio in secondary schools, primary schools and overall of (a) all the councils under Conservative control and (b) all the councils under Labour control for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Dunn: In January 1985, the latest date for which information is available, the pupil-teacher ratios in maintained primary and secondary schools, the overall pupil-teacher ratio for each local education authority, and an indication of the political control of each authority were as follows:

School Closures and Reorganisation

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether, in considering proposals for school closures or reorganisation, he will take into account the extent to which schools affected have suffered disruption by teachers in dispute with their employers.

Mr. Dunn: The initiative for proposing school closures rests with local education authorities. Where such proposals come to him for decision, the Secretary of State seeks to take account of all, and only, the relevant factors, with a view to deciding proposals on their merits.

Science and Engineering Places

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many science and engineering places have been available at undergraduate and postgraduate level at universities and polytechnics in each of the last seven academic years; and how many applications have been submitted to the Universities Central Council on Admissions for undergraduate courses each year during the same period.

Mr. Walden: The number of places available is not collected. Numbers of applicants through the Universities Central Council on Admissions and numbers of first year students are shown in the following table.

*Full-time and sandwich applicants and students in science and engineering and technology

Teachers (Superannuation)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, in the light of the answer to the hon. Member for Woolwich of 14 April, Official Report, column 228, it remains his policy to consult separately with the Professional Association of Teachers and other bodies not represented on the teachers' superannuation working party about proposed new and amending regulations relating to superannuation, as indicated in the answer of 18 June 1985, Official Report, columns 67-8; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: Yes. My right hon. Friend consulted the Professional Association of Teachers and other bodies before making amendment regulations in December 1985 and will do so in respect of any future regulations relating to teachers' superannuation.

University of London (Royal Veterinary College)

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to reply to the letter of 8 November 1985 from the hon. Member for Dundee, East concerning student places at the royal veterinary college of the University of London.

Mr. Walden: I regret to say that the hon. Member's letter was mislaid. I have written to him today.

Leeds Metropolitan District Council

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was Leeds metropolitan district council education capital expenditure allocation at outturn and at constant prices in each year from 1981-82 to 1986-87; and what was the original bid received by his Department for each year.

Mr. Dunn: The information is as follows:

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many pupils were covered by the assisted places scheme during (i) 1984 and (ii) 1985.

Mr. Dunn: In the school year 1984-85 there were 17,386 pupils in the assisted places scheme. Latest figures for the current school year indicate a total of 21,380 assisted pupils for 1985-86.

Orchiectomy

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many operations of orchiectomy have been performed in trials sponsored by the Medical Research Council during the last seven years; and if alternative therapies were considered in each particular case.

Mr. Walden: I understand that orchiectomy is a recognised form of treatment for testicular and prostatic cancer. Between 1979 and 1985, 196 orchiectomies have been performed in multicentre collaborative trials of cancer treatment sponsored by the Medical Research Council (MRC); since then a further 91 patients have been designated to receive immediate orchiectomy in the current MRC sponsored trial in prostatic cancer involving a comparison of immediate with deferred orchiectomy. Alternative therapies would have been considered in each case prior to the patients's entry into the trial.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Illegal Fishing

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland what action will be taken by procurators fiscal against English fishing vessels, and in what circumstances, under the Inshore Fishing (Prohibition of Carriage of Monofilament Gill Nets) (Scotland) Order.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: Should an English fishing vessel be reported for carrying a monofilament gill net in the specified sea area in which the carriage of such a net is prohibited, the case will be considered for prosecution in the normal way.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

United States Export Denials List

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what is his policy towards support for

United Kingdom companies and individuals trading with parties named in the United States export denials list; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if, pursuant to the answer of 27 March, Official Report, column 611, he will issue guidance to companies as to what constitutes legitimate trading in the context of his policy towards the United States export denials list; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Companies and persons doing business in the United Kingdom should be guided by United Kingdom law and their own commercial judgment, as appropriate.

Industry (Return on Capital)

Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the average return on capital for (a) industry as a whole, (b) manufacturing industry, (c) industry without Government contracts and *(d)*industry with Government contracts in the latest period for which figures are available.

Mr. Butcher: Provisional estimates for 1985 are that the net real rate of return on capital employed was 12½ per cent. for all industrial and commercial companies and 8 per cent. for manufacturing companies. No comparable information is available for individual industries, which could not in any case be sensibly divided into those with and those without government contracts.

Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the 10 industries with the highest of returns on capital employed for the last year for which figures are available; and if he will list those rates of return.

Mr. Butcher: The results of the DTI's analysis of the published accounts of industrial and commercial companies include the ratios of net income to average net assets for large companies. These ratios are one fairly common measure of rates of return. The ratios are calculated separately for companies with mixed activities in manufacturing, with mixed activities in non-manufacturing and for 27 other industrial groups. The industrial groups with the largest ratios in accounting year 1984 were:

Industry	1980 SIC definition	Ratio of net income to average net assets
Leather and leather goods manufacturing	44	27·2
Tobacco	429	24·2
Electrical and electronic engineering; manufacture of office machinery, etc.	33 + 34	23·1
Processing of rubber and plastics; other manufacturing	48 + 49	22·4
Agriculture, forestry, fishing	01 to 03	20·3
Textiles	43	19·9
Business services; leasing	834 to 839; 84	19·4
Chemicals and man-made fibres; production of coal, coke and nuclear fuel	11 + 12; 15; 25 + 26	18·6
Retailing; hotels and catering; repairs of consumer goods and vehicles	64 to 67	18·5
Food manufacturing	411 to 423	18·1

Source: Business Monitor MA3 17th Issue to be published early May 1986.

Net income is defined as gross trading profit plus income from investments and other revenue income less interest paid on bank and short-term loans, payments for the hire of plant and machinery ad depreciation provisions. Average net assets is the average of net assets in the opening and closing balance sheets. Net assets includes fixed assets (net of depreciation), current assets and investments less current liabilities.

Estimates for accounting year 1984 include all accounts for periods ending between 1 April 1984 and 31 March 1985. Large companies are those with capital employed of more than £4·16 million at the end of their 1984 accounting period.

The ratios are calculated from amounts shown in companies accounts compiled on the basis of historical costs and will be higher than equivalent ratios calculated from accounts adjusted for inflation. The difference between historic and current cost rates of return varies between industries depending on, for example, the capital intensity of each industry.

Trade Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the United Kingdom's share in the volume of world trade in manufactures each year since 1970 and in each quarter since 1 January 1983, together with the index based on 1980 of the real exchange rate measured in terms of relative export prices.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is in the following table.

*United Kingdom Trade in Manufactures

‖ Estimated.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for 1970 and 1985 United Kingdom imports from and exports to the European Economic Community and to the rest of the world of, respectively, textiles, clothing, footwear, motor cars, buses and coaches, heavy goods vehicles, plastics, ships, steel and domestic electrical appliances.

Mr. Alan Clark: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether it was with his authority that the Yorkshire and Humberside regional director of his Department made a statement criticising the use of the Central Electricity Generating Board site at Killingholme, South Humberside, for nuclear dumping and expressing a preference for industrial development on the site.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I understand that the regional director made the point that south Humberside was an area of great industrial potential. He added that this is one of the factors that will clearly have to be taken into account in forming a decision on the use of the South Killingholme site. The regional director made no criticism of the CEGB.

Libya

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the value of United Kingdom exports to Libya in 1985; what was the value of imports from Libya in 1985; and what figures he has for the first quarter of 1986.

Mr. Alan Clark: Figures for the period January to December 1985, and for January and February 1986, are published in table 1B of the appropriate volumes of the United Kingdom Overseas Trade Statistics, copies of which are available in the Library.

Citizens Band Radio

Sir Patrick Wall asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects European citizens band frequencies to be adopted by the United Kingdom.

Mr. Butcher: Further to my answer of 7 May 1985 at column 317-18, the Government are still aiming towards 1987 as a target date for the adoption of the additional conference of European posts and telecommunications (CEPT) citizens band radio frequencies. We need to finalise some remaining consultations with existing users of affected frequencies and once this is done I will make a fuller statement.

Short Range Radio

Sir Patrick Wall asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy that Britain participates in the proposed European short range radio service in the 900 MHz band.

Mr. Butcher: My Department is taking part in the conference of European posts and telecommunications (CEPT) discussions about the proposed short range radio service in the 900 MHz band. We will consider any recommendations that CEPT may make on such a system on their merits. We are consulting United Kingdom manufacturing and user interests and no decisions have yet been taken.

Private Health Schemes (Regional Aid)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much has been paid in regional selective assistance to private hospital or private nursing home developments in each year since eligibility was introduced.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information requested is as follows:

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to extend eligibility for regional development grants to the private health care and insurance industries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I will be reviewing those activities which currently qualify for regional development grant during the current review of the assistance schemes. No decision has yet been made to extend eligibility for regional development grant to include private health care and insurance industries, although both activities will be considered, with others, as part of the review.

Rolls-Royce

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any further progess to report on the privatisation of Rolls-Royce.

Mr. Pattie: The Government have agreed that Rolls-Royce should re-register as a public limited company on 1 May 1986. This is an essential step preparatory to privatisation. Subject to market conditions, the Government intend to return the company to the private sector in the first half of 1987.

The Government intend that provisions should be introduced into the company's articles of association before privatisation to ensure continuing United Kingdom control of Rolls-Royce. These provisions will be protected by a special share to be held by the Government. The details of these arrangements are still under consideration, and a further statement will be made in due course.

Regional Development Grants

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to exclude particular products or occupations from eligibility for regional development grants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: As part of the review of the Government's revised assistance schemes, I will be reviewing those activities which currently qualify for regional development grant. No decision has yet been taken to exclude particular products or occupations from eligibility for regional development grant.

Pyramid Selling

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how many prosecutions have taken place under the Fair Trading Act 1973 in relation to pyramid selling up to the latest date for which figures are available;

(2) if he will review the working of the Fair Trading Act 1973 in relation to pyramid selling;

(3) if he proposes to take any further steps to curb pyramid selling and associated practices.

Mr. Howard [pursuant to his reply, 7 April 1986 c. 428]: There have been no prosecutions, to my knowledge under the pyramid selling provisions of the Fair Trading Act 1973 but other action has been taken against trading schemes in this area. For example, Gem Collection Cosmetics Ltd was compulsorily wound up in the public interest, on 20 January 1986, on the petition of the Secretary of State.

As I mentioned in response to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) on 11 April at c. 223 my Department will shortly complete a review of the pyramid selling provisions of the Fair Trading Act 1973 and possible changes will be considered in the light of the outcome. Meanwhile, my Department has strengthened its procedures for monitoring the activities of businesses operating in this area and will continue to take whatever action is necessary against suspect schemes and their promoters.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Charity Law

62. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been brought during the past three years for breaches of the law on charities.

Mr. Mellor: Records available to me, which may be incomplete, show the number of proceedings in England and Wales for offences against charity laws as 55 in 1982, 29 in 1983 and 19 in 1984. Information for 1985 is not yet available.

News International Plant, Wapping

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the vehicles or personal details belonging to people who live in the vicinity of Wapping have been entered into the police national computer on a police computer belonging to the Metropolitan police during the current industrial dispute there; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No details of persons or their vehicles have been entered on the police national computer or any other police computer by virtue of their residence in the Wapping area.

Police Computer Data

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of incidents known to his Department that involved alleged abuse of data held on (a) the police national computer and (b) other police computers.

Mr. Giles Shaw: This information is not held centrally. I understand, however, that following its inquiry we are to receive shortly a report by the Police Complaints Authority on the alleged misuse of the police national computer in connection with the BP car registration number competition.

Data Protection Act (Police Guidelines)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines have been issued to police officers about the implications for the performance of their duties of the criminal offences created by the Data Protection Act involving the abuse of personal data; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Two Home Office circulars have been issued to the police about the Data Protection Act (No. 64/1984 and No. 79/1985). Copies of both are available in the Library. They explain that chief officers and their agents, who include civilians employed by forces as well as police officers, would be liable to prosecution under section 5 of the Act for any breach of the user's register entry. An ACPO working party is considering the implications of the Act for the police service.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in respect of England and Wales, what was the number of crimes which were notified to the police but which were not cleared up in 1978 and 1985.

Mr. Mellor: The estimated number of notifiable offences recorded but not cleared up was 1·4 million in 1978 and 2·2 million in 1985, calculated as the difference between the number of notifiable offences recorded by the police in the year and the number of offences cleared up in that year. It is not possible to provide an exact figure for the number of offences recorded in a year which were not subsequently cleared up because some offences are recorded and cleared up in different years, and so the figures do not strictly correspond. Numbers of offences recorded and cleared up are published annually in chapter 2 of the Command Paper "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" (table 2.17 of the Issue for 1984, Cmnd. 9621) and most recently in a Home Office statistical bulletin (table 5 of Issue 4/86).

Police Dogs

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for reports from chief constables as to which police forces do not have dogs in service or training.

Mr. Giles Shaw: All the police forces for which my right hon. Friend is responsible under the Police Act 1964 have dogs in service. My right hon. Friend obtains an annual return from all chief constables of the number of dogs employed and further monitors the position through the force inspections carried out by Her Majesty's inspectors of constabulary.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report the number, type and purpose for which employed, of dogs in the Metropolitan police force, the annual cost of keeping the dogs and the number of dog handlers employed.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Metropolitan police have authority for a total of 332 dogs and handlers but in practice there is some variation from this figure in the number of dogs employed on operational duties or in training at any one time. As at 14 April 1986 there were 326 dogs in service costing an estimated £255,000 per annum. The breeds and the purposes for which they are used are as follows:

Function	Breed					Total
	German Shepherd	Bouvier	Labrador	Springer spaniel	Border collie
1. Operational
General duties	284	1	—	—	—	285
Narcotics	—	—	5	3	—	8
Explosives	—	—	15	1	—	16
2. Training	14	—	—	2	1	17
Total	298	1	20	6	1	326

There are in addition 54 puppies aged between six weeks and 12 months which will undergo training in due course to provide replacements for operational dogs (51 of these are German shepherds, two are labradors and one is a springer spaniel); and 11 brood bitches (all German shepherds).

Heathrow Airport (Immigration Officers)

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many interpreters are available to assist immigration officers at Heathrow air terminal; how many interpreters were on duty on 12, 13 and 14 April; how many passengers arriving at Heathrow on those days were detained awaiting to be interviewed; what was the shortest and longest period of detention; how many passengers detained were accommodated in hotels and at what cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Drug Traffickers

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what agreements he promised that Her Majesty's Government would seek with other countries to deprive drug traffickers of their financial gains when he recently addressed the Association of Chief Police Officers.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. Friend undertook to build on the powers given in the Drug Trafficking Offences Bill, once enacted, by negotiating mutual enforcement agreements with other countries. He also stressed the Government's support for a new United Nations convention on drug trafficking which will call for national measures in all signatory countries to facilitate the seizing of drug traffickers' assets.

Prison Officers

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what staffing levels have been employed at Her Majesty's prisons Winson Green, Featherstone, Holloway and Styal each year since 1979; what was the highest population level in each prison each year during the same period; and within what annual budget each governor was required to work during that period.

Mr. Mellor: Staffing levels have been as follows:

Birmingham	329	358	355	357	412	396	394
Featherstone	107	112	127	119	121	126	123
Holloway	171	185	210	270	277	310	313
Styal	65	103	104	104	104	105	108

The highest levels of inmate population were:

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985
Birmingham	1,118	1,119	1,096	1,119	1,153	1,158	*
Featherstone	484	492	515	529	533	536	*
Holloway	423	451	352	347	351	358	*
Styal	216	260	264	237	231	235	*

* Figures for 1985 are not yet available.

Governors of prison department establishments were given annual budgets for the first time in the financial year 1985-86, but only for prison officers' overtime. The overtime budgets were:

Birmingham	1,780,764
Featherstone	631,479
Holloway	775,862
Styal	285,312

Extradition (Italy)

Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what requests he has received from the Italian Government, following the signing of a new extradition treaty between Britain and Italy, for the extradition of Roberto Fiore, Massimo and Marinella Morsello, Marcello de Angelis and Stefano Tiraboschi and other Italian convicted terrorists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The extradition treaty between the United Kingdom and Italy which was signed in Florence in March has not yet been ratified. Until it comes into force, extradition between the two countries will continue to take place under the existing 1873 treaty. No Italian extradition requests in connection with terrorist offences have been received in recent months.

Bomb-making Manuals

Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he will take to stop dangerous material such as bomb-making manuals now openly on sale at militaria and book shops in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: If a publication contained material presented in such a way as to incite crime there might be grounds for a prosecution. Whether action should be taken in respect of a particular publication is in the first instance for the police, in consultation as necessary with the Director of Public Prosecutions. Publications such as bomb manuals generally contain little or no information which is not a matter of common sense, or already available in reference libraries. The police have no evidence of anyone making use of these manuals for terrorist or other criminal purposes.

Northern Ireland (Extremist Groups)

Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evidence he has of links and associations between members of the National Front in the United Kingdom and Protestant extremist groups in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I am aware of reports of links between members of the National Front and certain Protestant groups in Northern Ireland. Any evidence of unlawful actions in support of terrorist or paramilitary activity would be a matter for the police to investigate.

Drug abuse

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated whole-time equivalent number of police officers involved in duties of inspection of retail pharmacies under the Misuse of Drugs Act.

Mr. Mellor: A total of 49 officers are employed full-time on pharmacy inspection duties in 30 police forces in England and Wales. In the remaining forces this function is undertaken as part of the duties of one or more officers.

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what money he has allocated for 1986-87 to the budget of the Data Protection Agency for advertising.

Mr. Waddington: In his budget proposals for 1986-87, which remain subject to approval, the Data Protection Registrar has included a sum of £276,000 for advertising purposes.

Prison Officers (Accommodation)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 11 April, Official Report, column 195 what is the total loss in revenue from rents and other costs of the 59 prison officers quarters standing empty for four to five years at Culcheth; if he will detail the times when negotiations began and were completed in relation to whether any of the staff for the new prison at Thorn Cross desired the properties; what date Thorn Cross prison opened and was fully staffed; when negotiations were opened and completed with the Prison Officers Association on discount sales of these properties; and if he will supply details and dates of the difficulties with the sewage pumping station and the adoption of certain roads on the estate.

Mr. Mellor: Prison officers' quarters are made available rent-free, and no rent income is therefore lost when they are vacant.

Only essential maintenance has been carried out on the surplus quarters at Culcheth since they were released for disposal. The sewage pumping station and the roads have to be upgraded to local authority standards and this liability has to be negotiated as a condition of sale. The need for quarters for staff at Thorn Cross was under continuous review from early 1984 to June 1985. Thorn Cross opened in July 1985 and most staff were in post by the end of August 1985.

Discussions with the POA on discount sales and associated matters began in November 1983 and final offers were rejected by a national ballot in December 1985.

Immigration Check (Willesden)

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers and immigration officers, and of what rank, were involved in the operation at Willesden section house on the night of 16/17 April 1986; how many people, and of what nationalities, were (a) interviewed and (b) detained in the operation; for how long and where; what was the immigration status of the 10 people who were arrested and not charged; for how long they were under arrest; and how many people were charged with theft as a result of the police investigations.

Mr. Waddington: One chief immigration officer, two immigration officers, one police sergeant and two police constables visited Willesden section house at 0600 hours on 17 April 1986 acting on information that persons believed to be in breach of the immigration laws were employed there. Four persons were interviewed when they arrived for work at times between 0630 and 0830 hours.

One Ghanaian was charged with overstaying. Two Ghanaians were found to be illegal entrants. The periods they spent in police custody at Kilburn police station before being charged or otherwise dealt with under the Immigration Act 1971 were nine-and-a-half, seven-and-a-quarter and nine-and-a-quarter hours respectively.

One Zambian was released without charge after inquiries at his home address. He was in police custody for six-and-three-quarter hours. Another Zambian at the same address, who was also a subject of the enquiry, was charged with working in breach of a prohibition on employment. She was in police custody for eight hours prior to being charged. No one was charged with theft.

News International Dispute (Wapping)

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the number of arrests which have taken place at Wapping, in connection with the print dispute, since 3 March.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner that since 3 March 226 persons have been arrested in connection with the News International dispute at Wapping.

"Policing the Miners' Dispute"

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to obtain a copy of the Association of Police Officers' paper entitled "Policing the Miners' Dispute," with a view to placing it in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I will reply as soon as possible.

Prison Population

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of persons detained in custody on 31 December 1985.

Mr. Mellor: On 31 December 1985 about 44,400 persons were held in prison department establishments in England and Wales. Details are to be found in table 1 of "The Prison Population in 1985", Home Office Statistical Bulletin 7/86.

Parole

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) male and (b) female prisoners were granted parole in each year since 1982.

Mr. Mellor: The information is as follows:

*Persons recommended for parole

Year of decision	Males	Females
1982	5,074	106
1983	5,228	118
1984	11,498	388
1985†	13,680	450

* Excluding those who were not released on parole because the board's recommendations were not accepted by the Home Secretary.
† Provisional figures.

Interpol (Soviet Membership)

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has about the possibility of the Soviet Union applying to join Interpol; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Secretary-General of Interpol is reported to have said that the Soviet Union may seek to join Interpol to tackle a growth of crime in that country. Application for membership of the Interpol organisation has to be submitted by the appropriate governmental authority for the country concerned and is subject to approval by a two-thirds majority of the organisation's general assembly. It will be for Her Majesty's Government and other member countries to take a view if any application is made.

Alcohol Abuse

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any new proposals to deal with the problem of alcohol abuse by teenagers.

Mr. Whitney: I have been asked to reply.

The Health Education Council is contributing to the production of two sets of health education material for 11 to 18-year-olds which will provide education on alcohol, drugs and smoking for young people, their teachers and parents. In addition, as part of the recent initiatives on drugs misuse, the Department funded the production of a health education video package for 12 to 15-year-olds in school, which covers alcohol misuse and smoking as well as drugs misuse. This is being made available, free of charge, to all secondary schools.

The results of a survey on adolescents' drinking habits, which the Department commissioned the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys to undertake, are expected to be published by the end of this year.

SCOTLAND

Housing Co-operatives

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the numbers of tenant management housing co-operatives now operating in Scotland under the local authorities, Scottish Special Housing Association and the New Towns Development Corporation; and what encouragement his Department provides to further tenant housing co-operatives.

Mr. Ancram: The decision on whether to set up a local tenant management co-operative is primarily for the housing authority concerned, and the Scottish Development Department does not collect statistics centrally on the number of such co-operatives. However, I am aware of some 11 management co-operatives currently operating in Scotland, the majority in the Glasgow area, and a further nine which are being actively considered.

The Scottish Development Department is concerned to improve tenant participation in housing management through measures such as the establishment of management co-operatives where appropriate. To this end we have recently agreed to continue for a further three years our funding of the tenant participation advisory service which aims, as one of its objectives, to assist the formation of housing co-operatives.

Acid Rain

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he is taking to evaluate the effect of acidic emissions from Irish power stations on the environment in Galloway.

Mr. Ancram: Estimates by the Department of Trade and Industry's Warren Spring laboratory indicate that acid emissions from Irish power stations are responsible for only a negligible proportion of the total deposition in Galloway.

Private Health Schemes (Regional Aid)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been paid in Scotland in regional selective assistance to private hospital or nursing home developments in each year since eligibility was introduced.

Mr. Allan Stewart: There have been no such payments.

Breast Cancer

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by health board in Scotland the numbers of women who are at present being treated for breast cancer.

Mr. John MacKay: The Scottish health statistics for 1984 (the latest year available) shows that during that year there were 6,936 discharges from the in-patient facilities of Scottish general hospitals of cases where the principal diagnosis was breast cancer.

The figures analysed by health board area are set out in the table.

	Number
Argyll and Clyde	464
Ayrshire and Arran	525
Borders	166
Dumfries and Galloway	185
Fife	505
Forth Valley	362
Grampian	572
Greater Glasgow	1,031
Highland	280
Lanarkshire	962
Lothian	1,229
Orkney	19
Shetland	41
Tayside	544
Western Isles	51

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will introduce a programme of voluntary comprehensive breast screening using mammography for all women over 50 years of age; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will establish a comprehensive screening programme for the investigation, diagnosis, treatment and support of women with mammographic abnormalities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: In accordance with the recommendations of an expert national committee, a programme of trials was introduced in England and Scotland in 1979 to establish the practicability and efficacy of screening methods in the reduction of mortality from breast cancer. These trials are due for completion in 1987.

Meanwhile, following the publication of encouraging results from studies overseas, my right hon. Friend the Minister for Health announced on 18 July 1985 the establishment of a working group to consider the information available on breast cancer screening by mammography and the extent to which this suggests any changes in United Kingdom policy on the provision of mammographic facilities and the screening of symptomless women.

The working group has considered the evidence available from all sources and has issued an interim report, copies of which have been placed in the Library. The group is due to submit its final report later this year. This should set out the policy options for the development of breast cancer screening, the respective costs and benefits, and the overall implications for the National Health Service. It would be premature to anticipate the advice of the working group before the completion of their remit.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many women died as a result of breast cancer in Scotland during the years 1980 to 1985.

Mr. John MacKay: The figures are as follows:

Female breast cancer deaths in Scotland

	Number
1980	1,214
1981	1,175
1982	1,228
1983	1,262
1984	1,242
1985	*1,247

* Provisional figure.

Hip Operations

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the length of time for replacement hip operations on patients in the Grampian health board area; and how this compares with the year 1984-85.

Mr. John MacKay: The mean waiting times for patients who were admitted from the waiting list for total hip replacements were 307 days during 1984 and 287 days in 1985.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many orthopaedic surgeons are employed in each of the health boards in Scotland who carry out hip replacement operations; and how many operations are carried out on average by each surgeon.

Mr. John MacKay: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as the information is available.

Prison Officers

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prison officers are engaged at Peterhead prison; and what is the average overtime worked by officers at the prison.

Mr. John MacKay: The number of members of the prison officer grade employed at Peterhead prison on 1 April 1986 was 222. They are conditioned to a 40-hour week and over the period of the last 12 months they worked an average of 14 hours overtime per week per officer.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the employed strength of prison officers at each prison in Scotland; and which prisons are under the employment ratio laid down for that particular prison.

Mr. John MacKay: Employment ratios are not used to determine staffing in the Scottish prison service. Each penal establishment has a staff complement which reflects the number fo staff necessary to cover authorised posts at that establishment. The number of members of the prison officer grade in post at 1 April 1986 is shown in the table.

Aberdeen	65	67	81

* As at 1 April 1986.

Notes

1. The table indicates the authorised staffing complement for each establishment in respect of discipline grades only, together with the staff-in-post figure for these grades as at 1 April 1986. The complement for specialist grades has not been included as some of these posts are filled by civilians ie civilian instructors and civilian craftsmen. The total prison officer in-post figure in column 3 includes nurse officers, caterer officers, clerk officers, works officers and officer instructors.
2. The Barlinnie complement is presently being reviewed.
3. Greenock prison has just been reopened following re-development and some staff have still to take up post.
4. Polmont young offenders' institution is presently holding remand prisoners in one of its wings as a temporary measure, and provison for this is ot included in the present complement.
5. The discipline officer in post figures include a number of new officer recruits.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met Scottish prison officers to discuss pay and conditions; and what was the outcome of these discussions.

Mr. John MacKay: The pay and conditions of service of prison officers in Scotland as in England and Wales are negotiated directly by the Treasury with the unions and are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prison officers have received injuries due to attacks by inmates at Peterhead prison in the years 1980 to 1985 and the latest figure for 1986; how many officers required hospital treatment; and how many days were lost by officers in the same period due to injuries sustained.

Mr. John MacKay: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Orthopaedic Surgery

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will discuss the problem of the shortage of junior house doctors in Grampian health board for the orthopaedic surgery department with the chairman of the board.

Mr. John MacKay: Staffing problems are matters for individual health boards, in the first instance, as they are responsible for keeping under review the adequacy of their service provision. In Grampian, the health board is well aware of the difficulty of attracting junior medical staff to this particular field and has already taken steps to tackle the problem.

EMPLOYMENT

"Lifting the Burden"

Mr. Prescott asked the Paymaster General how many employees and how many businesses will be affected if the proposal in the White Paper "Lifting the Burden" to alter the requirement on businesses to produce a written safety statement from those with five to those with 20 employees is implemented.

Mr. Trippier: The information is not available in the form requested.

Some indication as to the upper limit of the number of businesses affected can be obtained from the 1981 census of employment. This showed that there were about 4·4 million employees in some 420,000 census units (roughly equivalent to individual workplaces) in the size range 5-24 employees.

Industrial Accidents

Mr. Skinner asked the Paymaster General (1) how many persons have died due to accidents at work since 1979;

(2) how many persons have been seriously injured or disabled due to accidents at work since 1979;

(3) how many persons were injured or disabled in accidents at work in 1984 and 1985;

(4) how many persons were killed in accidents at work in 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Trippier: The available information is as follows:

Reported occupational injuries to Employed and Self-Employed persons at work in Great Britain.

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	Total 1979-84
Deaths*	615	579	503	516	507	496	3,216
Major Injuries†	n/a	n/a	12,406	12,402	12,561	12,624	49,993

Data for 1985 is not yet available.

* The reporting regulations were widened in 1981 with the coming into force of the Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1980 (NADOR). In 1979 and 1980 the figures include fatalities to some people in the new categories required by NADOR but reported on a voluntary basis. They are therefore not strictly comparable with the figures for 1981 to 1984.
† As defined in NADOR and reported to relevant enforcement authorities. Information before 1981 is therefore not available.
n/a not available.

Machinery Accidents

Mr. Skinner asked the Paymaster General what percentage of machinery accidents in manufacturing occurred in firms employing less than 10 employees in 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Trippier: In both 1983 and 1984 about 10 per cent. of such fatal and major occupational injuries, reported to Her Majesty's Factory Inspectorate, were in establishments with fewer than 10 persons employed.

Information for 1981 and 1982 could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. Information for 1985 is not yet available.

Young People

Mr. Charles Morrison asked the Paymaster General if he will introduce a voluntary scheme whereby young unemployed people can tidy up motorway verges by the removal of paper, tins and other rubbish.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. However, the Government are keen to encourage projects for environmental improvement under the community programme.

Scottish Gospel Outreach

Mr. Martin asked the Paymaster General (1) what arrangements exist for managing the schemes funded by the community programme and operated by Scottish Gospel Outreach; what representatives of (a) the Manpower Services Commission and (b) Scottish Gospel Outreach are involved in each case; and if he will make a statement,

(2) what information he has as to how many officials of Scottish Gospel Outreach are employed on the community programme-supported projects operated by this organisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Scottish Gospel Outreach runs two community programme projects: Dennistoun lunch club and Helping Hands. Responsibility for managing both lies with Mr. John Morrison on behalf of Scottish Gospel Outreach, but the Helping Hands scheme is also within an established community programme agency, Poldrait community development. Staff of the Manpower Services Commission's north Glasgow community programme area office are responsible for monitoring the operation of the schemes. The Manpower Services Commission does not keep information on whether employees of those sponsoring schemes under the community programme hold official positions in other organisations.

A number of workers on the lunch club project have recently made allegations about the running of the projects. The MSC's area employment manager has invited Scottish Gospel Outreach to comment on these allegations and has asked the area manpower board to consider the matter. The area employment manager will take his decision on the future of the project when he has received the comments of Scottish Gospel Outreach and the advice of the AMB.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will list, for each region, the latest figures for additional jobs created since December 1982 for (a) employees who are full-time, (b) employees who are part-time and (c) self-employed; and if he will list the numbers estimated to be second jobs.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The available estimates of net changes in employment are given in the table. No breakdown of the estimates for male employees in employment between full time and part time is available for these dates. The number of second jobs included in the estimates of employees in employment by region is not separately identified.

Job Creation Schemes

Mr. Sheerman asked the Paymaster General how many and what percentage of the 991,000 new jobs that have been created since March 1983 are filled by people on (a) community programmes, (b) enterprise allowance schemes and (c) YTS.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is estimated that the 991,000 increase in the employed labour force between March 1983 and December 1985 included 135,000 participants in the community programme and community industry, 50,000 participants in the enterprise allowance scheme and 42,000 in the youth training scheme. These groups represent respectively 14 per cent., 5 per cent. and 4 per cent. of the total increase.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Paymaster General how many and what percentage of the 554,000 new jobs that have been occupied by women since March 1983 are (a) less than 30 hours per week, (b) less than 20 hours per week, (c) short or no contract jobs and (d) pensioned; and what is the distribution of wages for the various categories.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The size of the employed labour force increased by 991,000 in Great Britain between March 1983 and December 1985; of this rise 554,000 was among female employees in employment. Out of this increase in female employees, 547,000 (nearly 99 per cent.) was for part-timers working 30 hours or less a week. The estimates do not distinguish separately employees who work less than 20 hours a week, those who have a short contract or no contract, nor those who are employed and have a pension.

Further analysis of the increase of the increase in employment between 1983 and 1985, although on a different basis from the series published in Employment Gazette, will become available from the labour force survey when the preliminary results of the 1985 survey are published on 23 April.

Data on the earnings of newly employed workers are not collected separately in surveys of wages and salaries.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Paymaster General what is the full-time equivalency of the 991,000 new jobs that have been created since March 1983.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Insufficient detail is available to calculate reliable estimates of full-time equivalents, which would, in any case, not reflect the importance of increasing labour market flexibility which has contributed to the continuing growth of part time jobs and has benefited both employers and employees.

Self-employed Persons (Incomes)

Mr. Sheerman asked the Paymaster General what is the distribution of incomes among the 457,000 new jobs that have been created since March 1983 that are classified as self-employed.

Mr. John Moore: I have been asked to reply to the hon. Member and shall do so as soon as possible.

WALES

Health Services

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the dates at which every new district general hospital, or other major new health facility, was opened since 1 April 1979, together with the estimated additional revenue consequences of each new capital development.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information is given in the following table:

Scheme	Opening date	Additional revenue consequences £ million
Royal, Gwent, scheme 5	October 1979	5·383
Ysbyty Glan Clwyd	May 1980	4·690
St. Woolos hospital, scheme I	March 1983	2·462
Ysbyty, Gwynedd	July 1984	7·216
The Princess of Wales hospital, Bridgend	October 1985	5·203
Morriston hospital, scheme I	October 1985	7·055
Wrexham district general hospital, scheme I	Projected June 1986	2·323

(1) All figures expressed at 1986-87 prices.

(2) The level of central funding provided reflects the net annual additional revenue consequences after taking into account the rationalisation of services at other hospitals consequent on the new development.

(3) The revenue consequences of the Princess of Wales hospital and Morriston hospital, scheme I have been adjusted to take into account the estimated cost of water and general rates.

Water Industry

Mr. Rogers asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were working in the different occupational categories in the water industry in Wales in 1975 and each subsequent year.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information requested is not held by the Department. I have written to the chairman of the Welsh water authority, and he will reply to the hon. Gentleman.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Rogers asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were working for the Forestry Commission in Wales in 1975 and each subsequent year.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The number of people employed by the Forestry Commission in Wales at 31 March in each of these years was as follows:

Year	Number employed
1975	1,525
1977	1,451

1978	1,484
1979	1,482
1980	1,414
1981	1,361
1982	1,280
1983	1,205
1984	1,118
1985	1,029

Complete figures showing the position at 31 March 1986 are not yet available on central records.

Mr. Rogers asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were working in the different occupational categories for the Forestry Commission in Wales in 1975 and each subsequent year.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information showing the position at 31 March in each of these years, is as follows:

Group	Year
	1975	1976	1977	1978	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985

The increase in the number of employees in the Administration group in the last two years was mainly a result of the transfer of forest clerks from the industrial class to the clerical and typing grades in the non-industrial class.

Complete figures showing the position at 31 March 1986 ar not yet available on central records.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Department of the Director of Public Prosecutions

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Attorney-General how many people qualified as solicitors or barristers are employed in the office of the Director of Public Prosecutions.

The Attorney-General: Sixty-five people qualified as solicitors or barristers are employed as practising lawyers in the Department of the Director of Public Prosections.

The new Crown Prosecution Service which came into being on 1 April in the areas formerly designated metropolitan counties employs 351 people qualified as solicitors or barristers who practise as lawyers.

In addition there is a small number of qualified lawyers employed in other grades in the Department and in the Crown Prosecution Service, but records do not allow these to be identified.

9 Signals Regiment

Mr. Dalyell asked the Attorney-General on what dates his office received the first and subsequent reports from the Director of Public Prosecution's office following the visit of officials to Cyprus in connection with inquiries into possible breaches of security at United Kingdom bases in Cyprus involving 9 Signals Regiment.

The Attorney-General: Following the return from Cyprus of an official of the Director of Public Prosecutions' office on 28 March 1984, the Director of Public Prosecutions and he reported to me the next day. Subsequently a series of reports were made to me.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Attorney-General on what date the decision was taken to send an official from the Director of Public Prosecutions' office to Cyprus in connection with inquiries into possible breaches of security at United Kingdom bases in Cyprus involving 9 Signals Regiment; who was that official; and on what date he or she arrived in Cyprus.

The Attorney-General: On 19 March 1984 it was decided to send an official from the Director of Public Prosecutions' office to Cyprus. He arrived the next day. On 22 March 1984 it was decided to send a second official. He arrived on 25 March 1984. It is not the practice to name civil servants involved in individual cases.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Attorney-General on what date the decision was taken, and by whom, to send a Special Branch team to Cyprus in connection with enquiries into possible breaches of security at United Kingdom bases in Cyprus involving 9 Signals Regiment; what was the composition of that team; and on what date the composition was decided.

The Attorney-General: On 15 March 1984 the Director of Public Prosecutions decided to ask the Metropolitan police to send Special Branch officers to Cyprus. The director had already been informed on 13 March 1984 by the Metropolitan police that three officers had been allocated to the case.

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen asked the Attorney-General what action the Director of Public Prosecutions is taking on reports he has received from the anti-corruption squad of the Metropolitan police relating to possible offences involving the abuse of access to information contained on police national computer files by an alleged homosexual ring operating inside the force.

The Attorney-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions has received a report from the complaints investigation bureau of the Metropolitan police about the matters to which the hon. Member refers. It is at present being considered.

ENERGY

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will state the volumetric quantities for each of the low-level and low and high-activity intermediate level radioactive wastes, now in store at each nuclear power station, nuclear fuel fabrication, enrichment and reprocessing plant in the United Kingdom;

(2) if he will state the volumetric storage capacities at each and every nuclear power station, nuclear fuel fabrication enrichment and reprocessing plant in the United Kingdom;

(3) if he will provide data on the rate at which all redioactive waste storage facilities in the United Kingdom are being filled; and if he will estimate the date by which each of the facilities will be full.

Mr. Goodlad: These are detailed questions which fall within the responsibility of the industries' managements. I have asked the chairmen to write to the hon. Member.

Coal Industry

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to the answer of 10 April, if he will publish in the Official Report the main elements of the National Coal Board's new approach to the development of the coal industry and if he will indicate how these differ from the main elements of "Plan for Coal".

Mr. David Hunt: These are matters for the National Coal Board. I have asked the chairman of the board to reply to my hon. Friend.

CEGB Site, Killingholme

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had with the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board about the sale of the Central Electricity Generating Board site at Killingholme, South Humberside to a private firm for industrial development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: None. The board described its plans for the site in its letter of 11 April to the hon. Member. The board has no plans to dispose of the site.

Selby New Mine

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will publish figures to show the most recent estimated cost of production, expressed in pound sterling per ton, of coal from the Selby new mine;

(2) what is now the estimated outturn cost of the Selby new mine project; how much has already been spent on developing the mine; and what interest charges have accrued so far during construction.

Mr. David Hunt: These are operational matters for the National Coal Board. I have asked the chairman of the board to write to the hon. Gentleman.

Offshore Operations (Pipework)

Mr. Eadie asked the Secretary of State for Energy if, in the light of his Department's publication safety notice 2/86 on 19 March on temporary high pressure systems, he will discuss with the United Kingdom Offshore Operators Association the importance of its contracts for pipework being placed with companies that are well established in the industry and who employ personnel who are sufficiently trained and technically competent.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: Officials from my safety inspectorate are in regular discussion with the United Kingdom Offshore Operators Association on all matters affecting safety. Safety notice 2/86 dated 19 March 1986 is of particular importance to all organisations who have a safety interest offshore and has been widely circulated.

The purpose of the safety notice was to bring to the attention of industry, including the UKOOA, the need to ensure that companies which undertake such work are capable and employ personnel who are sufficiently trained, given adequate instruction, and are competent.

This item will be on the agenda for a meeting between my officials and representatives of the UKOOA safety committee on Thursday 24 April.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

United States (Extraterritorial Controls)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions in the years 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986 he has raised with the United States State Department the issue of United States extraterritorial controls in the United Kingdom computer industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Lynda Chalker: None, but Her Majesty's embassy keeps in touch with the United States authorities over such matters.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards the acquisition for his Department's use, through the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency or otherwise, of computers and equipment supplied by companies which seek to impose extraterritorial United States controls on their United Kingdom staff or on non-Government United Kingdom customers or on exports from the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office does not accept any extraterritorial constraints when purchasing such equipment.

Non-Proliferation Treaty

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to treat the non-proliferation treaty as an arms control agreement.

Mr. Renton: The objectives of the non-proliferation treaty are both arms control and the promotion of co-operation between states parties in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy. The Government treat the NPT accordingly.

Territorial Waters

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to extend British territorial waters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The question of extending the territorial waters adjacent to the United Kingdom is still under consideration.

9 Signals Regiment

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representative of his Department was sent to Cyprus to assist work and liaise with British military authorities involved in the investigation of possible breaches of security involving 9 Signals Regiment.

Mr. Renton: I can confirm that one of our officials was sent to Cyprus to assist in the investigations. It is not the practice to name individuals.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to what extent the Cypriot authorities were informed that inquiries were being made into a possible breach of security at United Kingdom bases in Cyprus with respect to the British servicemen who were later tried and acquitted in October 1985; on what dates they were so informed; by whom; if this was done through official channels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Matters of this nature would naturally arise in the context of the normal close contacts enjoyed between the Cypriot authorities and Her Majesty's Government through the British high commission in Nicosia.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what request was made for co-operation from the Cypriot authorities to assist in inquiries with respect to a possible breach of security at United Kingdom bases on Cyprus; on what date this request was first made; by whom and to whom; and what was the reply.

Mr. Renton: No such request was made.

Nuclear Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 3 March, Official Report, column 12, if he will list the outstanding verification issues which remain to be resolved in negotiations for a comprehensive test ban treaty.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the speech I gave during the Adjournment debate on 26 March at column 1047.

Butter

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the Government have made to the French Government concerning the stricter enforcement of non-tariff barriers to trade on imports from New Zealand to France; what reasons are given for these restrictions; whether Her Majesty's Government will veto any attempt by other member countries to impose further restrictions on United Kingdom imports of butter from New Zealand; and if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the tonnage of United Kingdom imports of butter and cheese from New Zealand each year since 1970.

Mrs. Chalker: Any restrictions on imports into the European Community are a matter for the Commission. The Commission is seeking information from the French on the extent of, and basis for, any restrictions on New Zealand imports into France in order to be able to respond to New Zealand's request for consultations under the GATT.

We remain fully committed to working for continued access for New Zealand butter. The Commission will introduce proposals for New Zealand's 1987 quota of butter exports to the Ec later in the year. The tonnages of United Kingdom imports of butter and cheese from New Zealand each year since 1970 are as follows:

1970	66,538	157,419
1971	71,407	146,749

	Cheese SITC code 024 tonnes	Butter and butteroil SITC code 023 tonnes
1972	64,314	117,732
1973	47,344	131,953
1974	19,173	119,440
1975	30,282	123,955
1976	30,562	122,626

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Third World Countries (Aid)

60. Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how he assesses the efficacy of the British aid programme in alleviating the suffering of the poorest communities in Third world countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Raison: Our aid programme is effective in helping to alleviate poverty and is carefully monitored. Much of it helps the poorest people directly. But alleviation of poverty also depends upon sustainable economic progress, which our aid is designed to promote.

Afghan Refugees

61. Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has yet reached a decision on requests for further humanitarian assistance to the Afghan refugees in North-West Pakistan and to displaced persons inside Afghanistan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Raison: During his recent visit to Pakistan my right hon. and learned Friend announced an allocation of £4·8 million of bilateral aid for Afghan refugees and displaced persons for the current financial year. This is an increase of 17 per cent. over last year's allocation.

Famine Relief (Horn of Africa)

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about United Kingdom famine relief in countries of the Horn of Africa.

Mr. Raison: In the calendar year 1985 the Government committed £40 million bilaterally and through the European Community for famine relief in Ethiopia and £1·5 million for Somalia. So far in 1986 similar commitments amount to £9 million for Ethiopia and £0·25 million for Somalia. Total commitments bilaterally and through the European Community for famine relief in the Horn of Africa as a whole have amounted to £77 million since the beginning of 1984.

Fiji

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current level of aid for Fiji; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Raison: British aid to Fiji in 1985 was £3·95 million, including £1·7 million in project aid from the Commonwealth Development Corporation and £0·3 million for disaster relief.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Heating

Mr. Soames asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will order the heating to be turned off immediately in the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Biffen: The parliamentary works officer is required to maintain the temperature in the Palace of Westminster as near to 66F as is possible. This has to be related to the outside temperature. Outside temperature readings over the past week have been well below 60F and in some cases below 50°F. These temperature readings do not justify the heating being turned off. The situation is, however, kept under review on a daily basis.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Mr. A. Cecil Walker asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the additional burden placed on the Royal Ulster Constabulary as a result of the Anglo-Irish agreement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: One of the principal objects of the Anglo-Irish agreement is to bring about a reduction in violence in Northern Ireland through increased co-operation between the security forces of the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland. This in time will reduce the very heavy demands made on the RUC. Unfortunately, progress towards this goal has been hampered by the outrageous behaviour of some opponents of the agreement. By seeking confrontations with the RUC, and attacking off-duty police men and women and their homes and families, they have made the force's task even more difficult and have caused the diversion of valuable police resources from the fight against terrorism.

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will now specify the benefits obtained from the Anglo-Irish agreement in the campaign against terrorism.

Mr. Scott I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Prescriptions (Monitoring)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which drugs are covered by the computerised monitoring system of repeat prescriptions by general practitioners;

(2) what was the cost of maintaining the computerised monitoring system for repeat prescriptions by general practitioners for each of the last five years.

Mr. Needham: There is no systematic monitoring of repeat prescribing by general practitioners.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Clerical Officers and Principal Grades

Mr. Wigley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the basic pay rates were for clerical officer and principal grade, respectively, in the Civil Service in 1970; what they are now; and if he will also express the figures in real terms taking the 1970 figures as the base.

Mr. Brooke: Basic pay rates for staff on the maxima of clerical officer and principal grade pay scales, in both actual and 1970 prices, are as follows:

Basic rates of pay at maxima of scales (£)

	1 April 1970	1 April 1985
Actual
Clerical officer	1,253	6,293
Principal†	3,902	18,363
1970 Prices*
Clerical officer	1,253	1,232
Principal†	3,902	3,596

* Using annual average values of the retail prices index.
† Principal grade was assimilated in unified grade 7 on 1 January 1986.

Customs and Excise

Mr. Soley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total number of uniformed preventive officers employed by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in each of the years from 1975 to 1985.

Mr. Brooke: I regret that figures for the number of uniformed preventive officers employed by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise are not available for the years before 1979, but at 1 April for each year from 1979 to 1985 they were as follows:

	Number
1979	3,007
1980	2,863
1981	2,695
1982	2,568
1983	2,483
1985	2,503

At 1 April 1986 the estimated number of uniformed preventive officers was 2,650, and in the current financial year the number is planned to rise to about 3,000.

Acceptances in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Faulds asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will add to his answer to the hon. Member for Warley, East of 8 April, Official Report, column 101, further Treasury announcements in the Official Report of acceptances of items in lieu of tax which specify the individual amounts of tax satisfied; whether he will give a complete list, including those announcements already figuring in his answer of 8 April, covering the period from the answer of 4 November 1977, Official Report, column 3, to that of 30 April 1980, Official Report, columns 549-50, inclusive; and whether he will rectify his statement that a Treasury answer on this subject appeared in column 358 of the Official Report on Sunday 26 October 1980.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Personal Taxation

Mr. Corrie asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what percentage of the population does not pay income tax in 1986-87 who did pay tax in 1978-79;

(2) what percentage of the population pay tax who have an income of up to £15,000 in 1985-86; and what was the percentage in 1978-79.

Mr. Moore: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Capital Taxation

Mr. Frank Field asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the revenue gained from (a) capital transfer tax and (b) capital gains tax for each year since 1979 and the total gained in revenue for both these taxes over this period of time, in real and cash terms.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Benefits (Taxation)

Mr. Frank Field asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the annual revenue gained from taxing unemployment benefit and the relevant part of supplementary benefit paid to unemployed claimants for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Business Expansion Schemes

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the value of tax relief for private hospital or nursing home developments under the business expansion schemes.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

EC Membership (Economic Consequences)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will provide his most up-to-date assessment of the economic consequences of United Kingdom membership of the European Economic Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The Government's assessment of the economic consequences of United Kingdom membership of the European Economic Community remains as set out in the memorandum submitted to the Treasury and Civil Service sub-committee inquiry into "The Financial and Economic Consequences of UK membership of the European Communities" (House of Commons report 57-II, 1984-85, 18 February 1985).

Exchange Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each member of the European monetary system the change in the real exchange rate measured in terms of export prices compared to the first quarter of 1979 and the first quarter of 1973 to the latest possible date in each case; and if he will also give the figures at each date in index form based on 1980=100.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

EC (Budget)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year since 1972 and the forecast for 1986 the amount of the gross contribution to the European Economic Community budget broken down into value added tax, customs duties and other imposts, together with the receipts under various heads, including any rebates.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food Labelling

Mr. Cohen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why he is not bringing forward proposals for the compulsory labelling of salt, sugar and fibre content in food.

Mrs. Fenner: The European Community Directive on Food Labelling does not permit the unilateral imposition by member states of extra food labelling requirements except in the circumstances described in article 15(2) thereof which would not justify compulsory labelling for salt, sugar or fibre. The proposed guidelines on voluntary nutrition labelling suggest a standard format which would include a declaration of fibre, sodium and sugars as part of the overall information that may be given.

Agriculture Production (Expenditure)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the increase in the expenditure proposed for agriculture under the European Economic Community budget for 1986 and the distribution of the increase within and between the main sections of the agricultural budget.

Mr. Jopling: The Commission has not formally proposed a supplementary budget for 1986. When presenting its proposals on agricultural prices, however, it suggested that an extra 790 mecu would be required in 1986. This estimate was based on the Commission's latest assessment of market developments and assumed that their price proposals would be adopted. The breakdown of the estimate by agricultural commodity is given in Volume II of the proposals which have been deposited in the Library of the House (document 4936/86).

CAP (Surplus Products)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each of the products subject to the common agricultural policy the amount spent on (i) storage and (ii) overseas disposal of surpluses in 1984 and 1985, together with the latest forecast for 1986 and the amount spent in 1975.

Mr. Gummer: The table sets out Community expenditure on public storage and export refunds on commodities which have been in structural surplus (cereals, sugar, milk products and beef).

	Storage costs (mecu)	Export refunds (mecu)
1975	272	835
1984	995	5,444
1985	1,298	5,796
1986	1,693	6,957

Agricultural Development and Advisory Service

Mr. Walters asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce legislation to set up a fund to indemnify against the consequences of incorrect advice given by Agricultural Development and Advisory Service staff; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: There is no need for a special fund; any established claim against my Department would be met out of public funds as at present.

Mr. Walters asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if there are any proposals to reduce the staff employed by the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: As at 1 April 1986, 4,683 ADAS staff were in post. As regards post losses, I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister on 27 February 1986 to my hon. Friend the Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls) at column 644.

Food Prices

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the effective incidence of the European Economic community levies on food prices on the same basis as given in his answer dated 31 March 1985, Official Report, column 391.

Mrs. Fenner: I assume the hon. Member is referring to the reply published in the Official Report dated 4 March 1985, columns 393-94. The information given in that reply is updated in the table. I remind the hon. Member that the "world" prices derived for the purpose of this calculation do not represent those which might obtain were more supplies purchased from non-Community sources.

United Kingdom levy as percentage of (a) the Intervention Price in the United Kingdom and (b) the "World Price"

Per cent.

	2 July 1985		9 April 1986
	(a)	(b)	(a)	(b)
Beef and veal	71	175	66	133
Pigmeat	26	28	38	46
Poultrymeat	—	20	—	27
Eggs	—	25	—	37
Butter	75	208	84	281
Skimmed milk powder	68	155	85	296
Common wheat	68	70	82	142
Barley	55	67	77	155
Sugar	85	290	68	148

Notes

1. "Intervention prices" have been taken as:
   Beef and veal — intervention price converted to carcase equivalent using 53·8 per cent. killing-out coefficient.
   Pigmeat—lowest intervention price.
   Butter—intervention price for 82 per cent. butter.
   Skimmed milk powder—intervention price.
   Common wheat and barley—intervention price.
   Sugar—intervention price for white sugar plus storage levy.
   There are no intervention prices for poultrymeat and eggs.
2. "World prices" have been calculated by subtracting the common levy in ECU from the threshold/guide price in ECU. The beef price is also adjusted for duty. In the case of pigmeat, poultrymeat and eggs the "world price" has been taken as the sluicegate price less supplementary levy where appropriate.
3. The levies taken are at the full rate. In the case of beef, butter and sugar the United Kingdom obtains a large proportion of its supplies at reduced rates of levy.

CAP (Levies)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the levies chargeable at the current time for all common agricultural policy products, together with the monetary compensation amounts, the threshold and so on prices and the world price on the same basis as the answer dated 3 April 1985, Official Report, columns 608-9.

Mrs. Fenner: The information requested is set out for the main commodities in the table. The import levies are shown after deduction of the monetary compensatory amount (MCA) and adjustment by the monetary co-efficient: the MCA that has been decucted is shown separately. I remind the hon. Member that the "world" prices shown are generally the lowest offer prices at the Community frontier which underlie the Commission's calculation of the variable import levies. These prices are the lowest recorded and it is likely that, on average, higher prices would have to be paid if larger quantities were to be purchased on world markets.

Levy and Monetary Compensatory Amount Applicable in the United Kingdom, Threshold Price and Notional "World Price" on 9 April 1986 for the Main Food Items covered by the Common Agricultural Policy.

Poultrymeat	201	−16	880	734
Eggs	221	−19	779	602

Notes

n/a=not applicable.

All figures have been rounded to the nearest £.

* The rates of levy vary for different tariff headings. The rates quoted are: beef and veal—carcase; pigmeat—carcase; poultrymeat—70 per cent, chickens; rice—wholly milled long grain; olive oil—virgin; eggs in shell. Levies are shown after deduction of the monetary compensatory amount where applicable.

† For commodities for which there is no threshold price the following have been taken: beef and veal—guide price converted to deadweight (using a killing out percentage of 53·8 per cent.): pigmeat and sheepmeat—Basic price; pultrymeat and eggs—sluicegate prices plus basic levy; converted at the green rate of exchange.

‡ Notional "world" prices have been calculated by subtracting the levy applicable on 9 April from the "threshold" price. The beef price is also adjusted for duty. In the case of pigmeat, poultrymeat and eggs, the "world" price has been taken as the sluicegate price, less supplementary levy where appropriate. The resulting estimate has been converted from ECU/t at the appropriate market rate of exchange £0·671974=1 ECU.

¶ A special lower rate of levy is applicable to imports of butter from New Zealand.

• Most imports of beef from third countries are subject to special arrangements allowing entry at reduced levy rates.

■ Imports of lamb under voluntary restraint arrangements with principal suppliers and related agreements are subject to a reduced charge of 10 per cent. ad valorem. Any imports outside these arrangements are subject to levies which cannot exceed the 20 per cent. tariff bound in the GATT.

Norway (Salmon Conservation)

Mr. Onslow asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information is available to him concerning the salmon conservation policies of the Norwegian Government, with particular reference to drift netting and the use of monofilament nets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Sheep Animal Premium

Mr. Maclennan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland, Official Report, 6 March, columns 260-61, he will (a) account for the method of distinction between severely disadvantaged land and hill sheep land in Scotland, (b) give the reasons for his selection of severely disadvantaged land in Cumbria under the published criteria for the extension of sheep annual premium to untupped shearlings and (c) say whether he intends asking the Council of Ministers to extend the arrangements for areas and breeds of ewe in the United Kingdom to qualify for premium payments.

Mr. Jopling: The relevant decision taken by the Council of Ministers last May referred to "well-defined regions". The proposals we put to the Commission were based on the assessment made — by my officials and those of my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Scotland — of those areas in England and Scotland respectively where the geographical conditions were such that shearlings could not usually be put to the ram. The definitions chosen covered all such areas in both countries.

As I have previously made clear, I am continuing to press for an extension of the present arrangements and it has now been agreed that a Commission official should make an inspection visit to Scotland in May.

Food From Britain

Mr. Maclennan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about future financial arrangements for Food From Britain.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend the Minister gave him on 6 March 1986 at column 434.

Output

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the proportion of agricultural output accounted for by holdings of 1,000 standard man-days and over.

Mrs. Fenner: This information will take some time to extract. I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Sheepmeat

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each of the past six years and at the present time the difference between the support price for sheepmeat and the market price.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Farm Rents

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing average farm rents in pounds per hectare and as a percentage of 1975 in each of the years 1981 to 1985 and at the latest available date.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Product Sales

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for 1970, 1979 and 1985 the tonnage of each agricultural product disposed of to non-European Community countries under the common agricultural policy and the cost to the European Economic Community budget.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Australian and South African Sherry

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent restrictions have been placed on the marketing in the United Kingdom and the European Economic Community of Australian and South African sherry; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: Under the terms of the treaty of accession of Spain and Portugal to the Community, the descriptions British, Irish and Cyprus sherry may continue to be used for products sold in the United Kingdom or Ireland for a period of 10 years, subject to review at the end of that period. There is no similar provision authorising the continued use of the descriptions Australian and South African sherry for products sold on Community markets.

Spain and Portugal (US Imports)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to other European Economic Community member states concerning the imposition of restrictions on imports of foodstuffs from the United States of America into Spain and Portugal; and what justification has been given for such restrictions.

Mrs. Fenner: Before joining the Community, Spain and Portugal both operated restrictive import regimes for a number of agricultural commodities, through levies, quotas, state monopoly import arrangements and restrictive import licensing. The Treaty for the Accession of Spain and Portugal to the Community provides, in addition to the phased adoption by these countries of the common agricultural policy, for the continued operation of certain quantitative import restrictions for a limited period. None relates specifically to imports from the United States of America. Discussions are at present taking place within the Community on the appropriate response to United States complaints at the effect of these restrictions.

Opium Poppies

Mr. Corbett asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken, and on what dates, to collect exact details of the acreage of opium poppies to be grown for seed in England and Wales, the variety used and the location of fields where the crop is drilled.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 17 April 1986, col 469]: This information will be collected using powers under the Agricultural Statistics Act 1979. As planting of this very limited crop is incomplete the details have not yet been collected.

TRANSPORT

A36, West Wellow

11. Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects that his Department will have completed the survey of the A36 at West Wellow.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: By the summer.

Road Haulage Industry

12. Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied with the current performance of the road haulage industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: Road haulage firms provide an efficient and economical service to customers; 85 per cent. of industry's freight transport is carried by road. The cost of road transport fell by one third in real terms in the 10 years up to 1984.

GLC Lorry Ban

13. Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the latest number of exemption permits issued in connection with the lorry ban instituted by the Greater London council prior to its abolition.

Mr. Ridley: The GLC indicated last month that it had issued about 30,000 lorry exemption permits, and refused only four.

24. Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to whether articulated lorry trailers are covered by the lorry ban implemented by the Greater London council before its abolition; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I understand that the GLC did not apply this ban to such trailers, which are estimated to make up 90 per cent. of London's vehicles over 16.5 tonnes. The M25 is proving an attractive alternative route for articulated vehicles and other traffic.

34. Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the latest cost of the lorry ban instituted by the Greater London council; and how many lorries he estimates have been excluded from London under the terms of the ban.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The GLC refused four applications. The figures the GLC gave last month indicate that its system cost at least £1·6 million to set up. The running costs are £0·25 million each year.

Channel Link

14. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made by the promoters of the Channel link since the decision of the British and French Governments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Since the decision, the promoters have signed a concession agreement with the two Governments and a tolling agreement with the two railway undertakings. The companies issue regular newsletters to keep the public in touch with progress.

Cyclists (Accident Statistics)

15. Mr. Dormand asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state the number of cyclists killed and seriously injured, respectively, in road accidents in 1984 and 1985 to the latest date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In 1984, 345 cyclists were killed and 6,250 seriously injured. Provisional figures for 1985 indicate that 295 cyclists were killed and 5,439 seriously injured. Reducing cycle casualties remains a priority for all concerned with road safety, both centrally and locally. Cyclists themselves can do more.

Coaches (Motorway Speed Limit)

16. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now reduce the motorway speed limit for coaches.

Mr. Ridley: Since our decision to introduce speed governors, I see no reason to reduce the 70 mph speed limit for coaches on motorways.

Road Safety

17. Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about road safety following the publication of the 1985 road casualty statistics.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I am sure that everyone will welcome the reductions in casualties announced last Thursday. Early reactions to the statistics recognise that improvements are still necessary and possible.

Aircraft Noise

18. Mr. Ottaway asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is considering any further initiatives to ensure that aircraft comply with noise preferential routes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Yes, I am examining what more we could do to ensure compliance with noise preferential routes at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted. One possibility I am considering is the permanent monitoring of the track-keeping performance of aircraft.

New Motorway Construction

19. Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Transport how much has been spent on new motorway construction in each of the past three years, at constant prices.

Mr. Ridley: The amount spent on new motorway construction at 1983-84 prices was £291 million in 1983-84, £295 million in 1984-1985 and, provisionally, £253 million in 1985-86.

Level Crossing, Lidlington, Bedfordshire

20. Mr. Madel asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether, following representations from the hon. Member for Bedfordshre, South-West he is yet able to say what decision his Department has reached in relation to the proposed barrierless level crossing in Lidlington, Bedfordshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: No decision by my Department is yet required on the modernisation of Lidlington level crossing since the British Railways Board has not yet made an application for a statutory order. The position remains the same as when I wrote to my hon. Friend on 25 March. I understand that there is to be a further meeting at which the railway will explain it's proposals to my hon. Friend's constituents and consider any points put to it before making any formal application for an order.

M25

21. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on progress on the construction of the remaining link of the M25 London orbital motorway between the A1 and the A41.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The contractors are making good progress. The four major contracts which make up this section should be open in the autumn.

Channel Tunnel

22. Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made on the implications of his decision on the Channel Tunnel Group scheme for a fixed channel link for the respective roles in the scheme of the French high speed train systems and the competing British Rail systems.

Mr. David Mitchell: British Rail has agreed in principle with the French railways that services between London and Paris will be provided by a single fleet of trains, which they will jointly manage. Arrangments for other services have yet to be made.

Okehampton Bypass

23. Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made on building the Okehampton bypass; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Good progress is being made. We expect to invite tenders in the summer with work starting around the end of the year.

British Rail Purchasing Policy

25. Mr. Allen Adams asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of British Rail to discuss British Rail locomotives purchasing policy.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend and I are happy to discuss any matter which the chairman of BR feels it helpful to raise. We last spoke about locomotive procurement on 22 January.

Dartford Tunnel

26. Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about bids so far received for the Dartford tunnel extension.

Mr. David Mitchell: Bids in response to my right hon. Friend's invitation of 3 March to submit proposals for a third crossing at Dartford are due by 31 May. Understandably, none has yet been received.

National Bus Company

27. Mr. Ryman asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many organisations or individuals, other than those employed by the National Bus Company, have expressed interest in the purchase of some or all of the company.

Mr. David Mitchell: Over 60 such organisations or individuals have expressed interest, the majority following NBC's press advertisement on 25 March.

29. Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many staff groups employed by the National Bus Company have expressed an interest in buying the division of the company that they currently work for.

Mr. David Mitchell: About 60 management or employee groups have so far expressed interest in mounting bids for the part of the National Bus Company for which they work.

Cabotage (French Territorial Waters)

28. Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has made to the French Government about allowing rights of cabotage to British-registered ships to trade in French territorial waters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: I have been pressing for the opening up of European cabotage in the context of European Community Transport Council discussions on the draft regulation applying the freedom to provide services to maritime transport. I reported on these discussions during the debate on the European Community shipping policy on 11 March 1986 at cols. 818-820. The draft regulation is to be discussed further at the next Transport Council on 6 May. My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State with responsibility for Shipping has also held bilateral discussions with his former French counterpart. We look forward to discussions with the new French Ministers before long.

British Airways

30. Mr. Sumberg asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has had any recent discussions with British Airways concerning the terms and conditions of the licensing of routes operated by British Airways.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. The licensing of routes is primarily a matter for the Civil Aviation Authority.

Motorway Information (Lorry Drivers)

31. Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to erect signs on motorways advising drivers of the availability just off the motorway of specialist service facilities for lorry drivers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are reviewing the policy on providing motorway signs to services for lorry drivers as part of the general review of direction signing. Motorway service areas already signed, do provide facilities for lorry drivers.

London Regional Transport (Attacks on Staff)

32. Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many violent attacks have been made on employees of London Regional Transport in the last year.

Mr. David Mitchell: The total number of assaults reported by London Regional Transport operating staff in 1985 was 1,722. The statistics do not distinguish between minor assaults and more violent attacks.

Liner Shipping and Freight Rates

33. Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the public response to the publication of his Department's document "Liner Shipping and Freight Rates" in the United Kingdom-Northern European comparison.

Mr. Ridley: The report was published immediately before Easter, and has already given rise to press articles. I understand that the British Shippers' Council plans to hold a seminar on the subject in June.

European Air Fares

35. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on progress towards liberalisation of European air fares.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government have now secured liberal air service arrangements with the Netherlands, Luxembourg, West Germany, Belgium and Switzerland. These are proving beneficial to travellers in terms of the choice of fares available, and helpful to airlines, and we are therefore continuing bilateral negotiations with other governments. We are also continuing to press hard for early agreement on a liberal air services regime applicable to the European Community as a whole.

Bus Services

36. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of current bus services have been registered in accordance with the Transport Act 1985.

Mr. David Mitchell: 14,958 services were registered with Traffic Commissioners by 28 February. There are some 22,000 current road service licences; this figure is only partially rather than directly, comparable with that for registrations.

London Regional Transport

37. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he next intends to meet the chairman of London Regional Transport.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend sees Dr. Bright from time to time. Their next scheduled meeting will be at the London Passenger Transport Group on 22 April.

Test Centre, Essex

38. Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans his Department has to open any new test centre in Essex.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department has no plans to open any new driving test centres in Essex. We hope to increase the capacity of existing centres at Grays and Brentwood later this year.

Business Expansion Scheme (Ship Chartering)

39. Mr. Gilroy Bevan asked the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the implications for the shipping industry of the extension, announced in the Budget Statement, of the business expansion scheme to ship chartering.

Mr. Ridley: The extension of the business expansion scheme to cover ship chartering has been sought consistently for some time by the shipping industry, particularly through the General Council of British Shipping. United Kingdom operators — particularly in the coastal, short sea and offshore trades — have considered that they have been at a disadvantage because similar schemes have been available to some of their continental competitors. In pressing its case, the industry has not made detailed estimates of the impact value of the extension, and indeed it is at this early stage difficult to make such an estimate. But I am very hopeful of a substantial response to the scheme, which should provide new opportunities for sound investment in these trades.

Local Government Reform (Public Transport)

40. Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with passenger transport authorities concerning the quality of public transport following the abolition of the metropolitan councils.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend and I have had a number of meetings with the new passenger transport authorities and discussed various aspects of their responsibilities.

Settle-Carlisle Line

41. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive the reports of the local inquiries into British Railways Board's proposal to close the Settle-Carlisle line.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand that the transport users' consultative committees for north-eastern and north-western England expect to be able to submit a joint report to my right hon. Friend later this year.

British Rail Engineering Ltd.

42. Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the chairman of British Rail concerning the future of British Rail Engineering Ltd.

Mr. David Mitchell: The chairman of British Rail keeps us informed from time to time of the board's progress on its review of options for the future of British Rail Engineering Limited.

Road and Rail Freight

43. Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated volume and value of road freight and rail freight for the most recent 12-month period for which statistics are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The estimated volume of domestic road and rail freight in Great Britain in 1984 is:

	Road	Rail
Tonnes Lifted (millions)	1,444	79
Tonne—Kilometres (billions)	106·9	12·7

There is no information on the value of the goods carried by either road or rail. However, the estimated cost of transporting the goods in 1984 is £20,100 million for road and £445 million for rail.

The figures for rail in 1984 are affected by industrial action related to the mineworkers' dispute. Further details of road and rail freight are available in Transport Statistics Great Britain 1974-84, available in the Library.

Railway Lines (Single Track)

44. Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Transport what mileage of railway lines has been single-tracked since 1979; and what mileage has since been restored to double track.

Mr. David Mitchell: I do not have this information. Decisions on singling are an operational matter for the British Railways Board.

Bypasses

45. Mr. Richard Holt asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any proposals to seek to amend current legislation to enable his Department to direct local authorities to build bypasses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department recently issued circular 2/86, which confirmed our policy that residential and shopping areas should be relieved of heavy through traffic. The criteria annexed to it include bypasses and relief roads among the matters to which the Secretary of State would have particular regard in accepting programmes for transport supplementary grant (TSG). It must be for the local highway authorities themselves to judge how and when to improve their roads, and which improvements to put forward for TSG.

M3 (Traffic Density)

Mr. John Browne asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish current traffic density forecasts for the Popham to Easton Lane, Winchester, section of the M3; and for how long he estimates that a dual two-lane motorway will cope with this traffic.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Traffic counts taken since the road was opened confirm the forecast which I gave in my answer of 25 February at column 499 to my hon. Friend. A dual two-lane motorway should cater for this traffic flow for the foreseeable future.

Verges and Hard Shoulders

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about his policy in regard to fitting full scale hard shoulders, as distinct from hard verges, on roads.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department's policy is to provide continuous hard shoulders, 3·3 metres wide and of the same construction as the rest of the road, on rural motorways and as much urban motorway as possible. Hardened verges, where the verge is strengthened and grassed, ceased to be specified in 1968. Since 1968 our policy has been to provide hard strips, one metre wide and of the same construction as the rest of the road, abutting the edge of the carriageway on the majority of all-purpose trunk roads, with lay-bys at least 3 metres wide at intervals.

Vehicle Taxation

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing estimated taxation revenue for 1986-87 in respect of (i) cars and taxis, (ii) light vans, (iii) buses and coaches, (iv) goods vehicles not over 3·5 tonnes gross weight, (v) goods vehicles over 3·5 tonnes gross weight and (vi) selected classes of heavy goods vehicles.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Separate figures are not available for light vans, which are taxed with private cars. Otherwise the information requested is given in the following two tables, which also provide related estimates of road track costs.

Opportunity has been taken to simplify the tables slightly by comparison with those published last year.

Further information on motor tax revenue and track costs will be given in the Department's annual paper "The allocation of road track costs", due to be published next month.

Roads

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated total cost of the public road system in 1986-87.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The total estimated cost in 1986-87 for all public roads in England is some £2,770 million.

Coaches (London)

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Transport what action he proposes to take to improve the facilities for the parking of coaches in central London on roads for which he has responsibility.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department has just published a report with general proposals for improving coach facilities in London. A copy is in the Library. Apart from the Marylebone road, central London roads are a borough responsibility.

Driving Licences (Medical Refusals)

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many holders of heavy goods vehicle and public service vehicle licences have, within the past year, had their licences terminated as a result of being found medically unfit; and how many of those licence terminations have been attributable to higher medical standards.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Out of nearly one million holders of these licences, about 2,000 have had them revoked or renewal refused by the independent traffic commissioners on medical grounds in the past year. The medical standards applied to existing licence-holders have not risen, though they have been more effectively applied in recent years.

Drivers (Medical Standards)

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Transport what medical standards now have to be met by holders of heavy goods vehicle and public service vehicle licences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The regulations made by the Secretary of State stipulate that the applicant for one of these licences shall not have had an epileptic attack since reaching the age of five and shall be fit to hold the licence having regard to his health and any disability which he may suffer. A current licence may be suspended or revoked by the traffic commissioners on medical grounds. The standards of fitness currently recommended by the medical profession are in the forth edition (1985) of "Medical Aspects of Fitness to Drive", published by the Medical Commission on Accident Prevention. I am sending a copy to the hon. Member.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Transport what right holders of heavy goods vehicle and public service vehicle licences whose licences are terminated for medical reasons have to obtain independent medical evidence for consideration at the time termination of their licence is being considered; what assistance is available to licence holders to meet the cost of securing independent medical evidence; what right of appeal exists against any decision to terminate a licence on medical grounds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: When the traffic commissioner receives a report that a driver has a relevant medical condition, he can ask the Department's medical adviser to ascertain whether this is compatible with the regulations and recommended standards. Normally this is established by obtaining details of the driver's history and condition, with his written permission, from his doctor and specialist. Where the diagnosis is uncertain, the medical adviser obtains a second opinion. The cost of these investigations is charged to the licensing schemes. Those whose licences are refused, suspended, or revoked have the right to request reconsideration by the traffic commissioner at a personal hearing, and also to appeal to the local magistrates. There is no provision for assisting with the cost of obtaining further medical evidence.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Transport if any right to compensation exists for holders of heavy goods vehicle and public service vehicle licences, whose licences are terminated on medical grounds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: There is no statutory provision for compensation, but there are insurance schemes which operate in this field.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Transport what were the main recommendations of his advisory committee on medical standards for heavy goods vehicle and public service vehicle licensing; which of those recommendations he has approved and not approved, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about new medical standards which apply in heavy goods vehicle and public service vehicle licensing; how the new standards vary from the previous standards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: There have been four changes in the medical standards in recent years. From April 1983, a higher standard of visual acuity has been recommended for new applicants (existing drivers are unaffected). The other three changes have been relaxations.

In April 1982, following consultation with representative organisations, the age after which suffering any epileptic attack bars issue of a licence was raised from three to five.

In October 1985, the latest edition of "Medical Aspects of Fitness to Drive", published by the Medical Commission on Accident Prevention, made two new recommendations. It advised that, although insulin-treated diabetes is generally regarded as incompatible with vocational driving, the traffic commissioners should give individual consideration to the cases of drivers who had previously been granted licences despite their being diabetics on insulin.

The publication also set out criteria under which those who have had a coronary thrombosis or bypass operation may now be regarded as fit to drive vocationally. Following consultation with the industry, I have decided that where this involves special hospital tests, the costs will be met from the driver licensing schemes.

British Business (US Laws)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy on the acquisition for his Department's use of computers and equipment supplied by companies which seek to impose extraterritorial United States controls on their United Kingdom staff or on non-Government United Kingdom customers or on United Kingdom exports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: I have nothing to add to my reply of 27 March at column 611 and to the statement of 9 April by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Treasury on the policy of the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency.

Manchester Airport (Rail Link)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to the letter he has received from the chairman of British Rail, the chairman of Manchester Airport plc and the chairman of the Greater Manchester passenger transport authority regarding a possible rail link to Manchester airport; what action he intends to take; and if he will agree to the meeting proposed in the letter.

Mr. Ridley: I have noted this letter and the accompanying report and have today written to the interested parties agreeing to an early meeting.

Dock Workers (Redundancy Payments)

Mr. Moate asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many personnel, other than registered dock workers, have been released on redundancy terms from the Port of London Authority since 28 October 1985 up to the present date; and what is the total money paid by Her Majesty's Government towards the cost of those redundancies.

Mr. Ridley: The number of personnel other than registered dock workers employed by the Port of London Authority who have taken voluntary severance since 28 October 1985 is 250; the Government have contributed £10 million towards the cost of these severances.

Mr. Moate asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many personnel, other than registered dock workers, have been released on redundancy terms from the Mersey Docks and Harbour company since 28 October 1985 up to the present date; and what is the total money paid by Her Majesty's Government towards the cost of those redundancies.

Mr. Ridley: The number of personnel other than registered dock workers employed by the Mersey Docks and Habour company who have taken voluntary serverance since 28 October 1985 is 144; the Government have contributed £4·1 million towards the cost of those severances.

ENVIRONMENT

Urban Housing Renewal Unit

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those local authorities which have submitted schemes for consideration under the urban housing renewal unit.

Sir George Young: The following local authorities have submitted proposals to the urban housing renewal unit:

Birmingham	Manchester
Blackburn	Mansfield
Bolton	Middlesbrough
Bradford	Newcastle
Calderdale	Newham
Camden	North Tyneside
Cannock Chase	Norwich
Coventry	Nottingham
Derby	Pendle
Ealing	Rochdale
Gateshead	Salford
Greenwich	Sandwell
Halton	Solihull
Hammersmith and Fulham	South Tyneside
Haringey	Stockton
Hartlepool	Sunderland
Kensington and Chelsea	Tower Hamlets
Kingston-upon-Hull	Walsall
Knowsley	Waltham Forest
Langbaurgh	Wandsworth
Leeds	Wigan
Liverpool	Wirral

Grant-Related Expenditure Assessment

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes to make any changes in the basis of, and factors used for, determining grant-related expenditure assessment.

Mrs. Rumbold: Proposals for improving individual GRE factors are discussed every year with the local authority associations. We are also considering the representations on GREs which have been made by Burnley borough council.

Enterprise Zones

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the enterprise zones in the Official Report, giving the year of inception in each case and the number of jobs created to date.

Sir George Young: The year in which each of the enterprise zones in England was designated and the increase in the number of jobs in the zone between designation and September 1984, the latest date for which information is available, is:

Enterprise zone	Year of designation	Number of jobs
Corby	1981	*n.a.
Dudley	1981	129
Dudley—(Round Oak)	1984	†nil
Glanford	1984	‡159
Scunthorpe	1983	‡159
Isle of Dogs	1982	1,859
Middlesbrough	1983	‖−656
North East Lancashire	1983	560

Rising Water Tables (PSA)

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the effect of rising water tables on buildings managed by the Property Services Agency.

Sir George Young: The Property Services Agency is aware of the problems entailed in the trend for water tables to rise, and has contributed towards the cost of a study into the situation in the London basin in the first instance (to be extended to other cities as necessary), which is being carried out by the Construction Industry Research and Information Association. There has been no effect on buildings maintained by PSA so far, such few instances as have occurred of flooded basements being due to local conditions rather than the general rise in water tables. The situation is being carefully monitored, and provided for in new deep construction work, such as the British Library extension.

Waste Disposal

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to the reply to the hon. Member for Carmarthen on 18 March, Official Report, column 92, what proportion of his Department's allocation of money to the reclamation of derelict land is specifically designed for the post-operative care and reclamation of dangerous waste landfill sites.

Mr. Waldegrave: There is no specific allocation for the reclamation of landfill sites in the derelict land programme. Applications for grant in respect of such sites will be considered on their merits, but grant will not normally be available for those which are subject to restoration conditions.

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will detail what proportion of research and development expenditure on the land-filling of wastes is allocated to dealing with wastes covered by the special waste regulations.

Mr. Waldegrave: In my reply to the hon. Member on 18 March at column 92 I listed our annual research expenditure on landfilling of household and industrial wastes. It is not possible to isolate the component spent on special wastes, which themselves comprise some of those generally referred to as hazardous.

Wheelchair Housing

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many units of wheelchair housing exist within (a) local authorities and (b) charitable housing associations.

Sir George Young: English local authorities reported in their housing investment programme returns, the numbers of wheelchair dwellings, excluding any in sheltered housing schemes, within their areas at 1 April 1985.

These returns showed 10,800 owned by the local authorities themselves and a further 900 owned by public sector agencies including other local authorities and new towns. Separate figures are not available for charitable housing associations, but the authorities reported 2,500 wheelchair dwellings owned by housing associations.

Walkers (Injuries)

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about how many injuries to walkers along public rights of way in the countryside occurred during 1985 as a result of attack from bulls or rams.

Mrs. Rumbold: Only one such incident has been reported to the Department. This involved a man who claimed to have been attacked by a Galloway bull while walking with his dog on a public footpath near Camelford, Cornwall.

Brown Hare

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to declare the brown hare a protected species; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I have no plans to do so at present.

US (Extraterritorial Controls)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 27 March, Official Report, columns 619-20, what relative priority he attaches to financial considerations, on the one hand, and to the implications of extraterritorial controls on computers tendered for purchase to Government Departments by American computer subsidiaries, on the other hand, when he decides which computers should be purchased by his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Government's policy is not to accept attempts to impose such controls, as stated by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Treasury on April 9 1986 at col. 95, and therefore I have nothing to add to my reply of 27 March.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the numbers of officers in each London borough who have received ex-gratia payments in connection with the abolition of the Greater London council, and as to the total sum involved.

Mr. Tracey: I understand that some such payments may have been made, but my right hon. Friend has no information as to numbers or total amount.

Environmental Health Officers

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total number of environmental health officers in 1979 and at the latest available date.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information is not available centrally.

Environmental Surveys

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will now take steps to encourage the Health and Safety Executive to publish its records on environmental surveys.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend's responsibility for the activities of the Health and Safety Executive extends only to the standards adopted and applied by the industrial air pollution inspectorate. It is the inspectorate's normal practice to publish the results of any of its own studies of pollutants in the vicinity of industrial processes within its control.

Surveys of the workplace environment are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Paymaster General.

Royal Estate (Insurance)

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the cost of managing the palaces occupied by Her Majesty the Queen and the royal family and the Tower of London, Hampton Court palace, those parts of Kensington palace open to the public and the banqueting house; whether any consideration has been given to having them valued for insurance; and if he will give an estimate of the likely cost of repairing the recent fire damage to Hampton Court.

Mr. Tracey: The cost of carrying out my right hon. Friend's responsibilities for maintaining and managing the royal palaces is expected to be £24·5 million in 1986-87, of which nearly half will be recouped in admission and sales receipts at those palaces which are open to the public. In view of the Government's policy of covering its own risks on the Government estate, there has been no need to consider valuation of the palaces for insurance. It is too early to give an estimate of the likely cost of repairing the recent fire damage to Hampton Court palace.

Tobacco Advertising (Sporting Events)

Mr. Macfarlane asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, if he will indicate the representatives of the British Broadcasting Corporation he has met to discuss tobacco advertising at sports events.

Mr. Tracey: I have met the managing director of BBC Television together with the heads of outside broadcast and sport to discuss the operation of the voluntary agreement with the tobacco companies on sports sponsorship.

Stockbridge Village Trust

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department expects to receive a copy of the report commissioned from the firm Roger Tyms and Associates evaluating the work of the Stockbridge Village Trust; and when he intends to publish the findings of this report.

Sir George Young: We expect to receive the final report soon, and we will consider a publication at that stage.

Tenants' Charter

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department intends to publish the findings of the study it commissioned from the Housing Research Group concerning the implementation of the Tenants' charter provisions of the Housing Act 1980.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend has no plans to publish the full report, though the researchers planned their own publication of this.

Housing Land

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all applications submitted to his Department during the last five years for consent for the disposal of housing land owned by a local authority at less than the best consideration reasonably obtainable; and if he will list those applications to which consent was given, together with details of the consideration actually obtained by the local authority and the best consideration which would reasonably have been obtainable.

Sir George Young: The information requested could not be provided in full without disproportionate effort and expense. The following is a list of the major applications received since June 1981, involving housing land worth £100,000 or more, where my right hon. Friend has consented to a disposal at less than best price.

It was a condition of all these consents that the reduction in the disposal price should be passed on in full, in the form of discounts off the sale price of individual houses or plots to purchasers falling within defined priority categories. These discounts were subject to the normal 5-year repayment rule (except in one case, where special terms applied). My right hon. Friend also required each disposing authority to make a contribution from the general rate fund to the housing revenue account to reflect the difference between the actual sale price and full market value.

(1) Sales of Housing Land for Self Build Schemes

Vendor Authority	Date of consent	Market Value of land	Sale price or percentage discount
Broxbourne Borough Council	12 July 1982	£300,000	Not more than 30 per cent.
South Buckinghamshire District Council	2 March 1983	£370,000	£259,000
Harlow District Council	21 May 1984	£257,600	£180,320
Suffolk Coastal District Council	6 June 1984	£206,500	Not more than 30 per cent.
Bracknell District Council	13 March 1985	£351,500	£300,500
South Buckinghamshire District Council	13 August 1985	£260,000	£182,000

(2) Sales of Housing Land for other Low Cost Home Ownership Schemes

Vendor Authority	Date of consent	Market Value	Sale price
Havant Borough Council	14 May 1982	£132,000	£29,190 plus profit sharing arrangement
Havant Borough Council	9 August 1983	£390,000	£65,664 plus profit sharing arrangement
Reading Borough Council	9 September 1983	£100,000	£12,000
Bromley London Borough	1 November 1983	£260,000	£130,000
Reading Borough Council	3 July 1984	£330,000	£230,000
Reading Borough Council	3 September 1984	£195,000	£105,000
Havant Borough Council	21 December 1984	£176,000	£16,176 plus profit sharing arrangement
Havant Borough Council	13 May 1985	£160,000	£112,000

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether nuclear waste dumps operated by Nirex will be used to dump waste produced by reprocessing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: No, there are no plans to do so.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, in the event of a joint site being selected for disposal of both civil and naval nuclear waste, a single planning inquiry will address both issues; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Yes.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what specialised skills and equipment will be required to enable NIREX to carry out geological studies of the selected sites for dumping of nuclear waste; how it will be financed; and whether it will be directly managed by NIREX or contracted out.

Mr. Waldegrave: I understand that the exploration will be carried out by consultants and contractors on behalf of, and paid by NIREX. It will be for all three parties to decide what equipment and skilled employees are needed, subject to any requirements the special development order authorising investigations may impose.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment for how long, and on what scale, the information and publicity campaign being mounted by NIREX in the four sites it has selected for consideration for dumping nuclear waste will be sustained; and what proposals he has for supplementing this campaign by local campaigns run by his Department.

Mr. Waldegrave: I understand that NIREX proposes to produce information on their activities for as long as is necessary. In this financial year it has budgeted £896,000 for this purpose. There are no proposals for local campaigns run by my Department.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the number of letters, representations and petition signatures against nuclear dumping received by him from 1 April to 15 April from each of the four areas which NIREX has shortlisted as nuclear waste dumps; what was the number of such protests about nuclear dumping in general; and what was the number of letters, representations and petition signatures in favour of nuclear dumping for each site up to 1 April and from 1 to 15 April.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall give the hon. Member an answer as soon as possible.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his proposals on the timetable involved for visiting each of the four sites shortlisted by NIREX as nuclear waste dumps.

Mr. Waldegrave: On behalf of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, I visited the site at Elstow on 16 April. I am visiting today those at Fulbeck and South Killingholme. I also intend to visit Bradwell; a date has yet to be arranged.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects present disposal facilities for low and intermediate level nuclear waste will be full at current rates of disposal.

Mr. Waldegrave: Present disposal facilities for low level nuclear wastes will be full by about 2010. This assumes that compaction is introduced at Drigg in 1987. If NIREX is able to develop a further near surface facility, for which it is now investigating four sites, the life of Drigg could be extended to about 2040. There are, at present, no disposal facilities for intermediate level waste.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if it is envisaged in the event of South Killingholme being chosen as the site for dumping civil nuclear waste, that a dump on the same or an adjacent site for the disposal of nuclear waste from naval submarines will be managed by NIREX; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: If South Killingholme were eventually chosen as a disposal site, it would take civil and defence wastes, including waste from nuclear submarines. NIREX would manage it.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if the announcement on nuclear waste dumps by the Minister of Local Government, Environment and the Countryside at Elstow on 16 April is Government policy; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Waldegrave: I made no announcement when I visited Elstow. What I did have were useful discussions with local representatives.

Water Authorities

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals to remove local authority members from water authorities.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My proposals for the membership of regional water authorities in the light of privatisation are set out in paragraph 102 of the White Paper "Privatisation of the Water Authorities in England and Wales" (Cmnd. 9734).

Acid Rain

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make an interim statement on the research projects undertaken with the help of public funds by the Royal Society of Arts on the problems of acid rain.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am not aware of any publicly funded research on this subject being undertaken by the Royal Society of Arts.

The Royal Society, however, is taking part in a 5-year collaborative programme of research into the acidification of freshwaters with the Norwegian and Swedish Academies, which has been funded by the Central Electricity Generating Board and the National Coal Board. This programme is a matter for the Royal Society and the two boards.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the cost to Her Majesty's Government of signing the international declaration calling for a 30 per cent. reduction in acidic emissions by 1993.

Mr. Waldegrave: There is considerable uncertainty about the future pattern of emissions from the United Kingdom, and in order to be certain of meeting this target it would be necessary to install flue gas desulphurisation equipment at two major power stations, at a capital cost of some £300 million. The cost would be borne by electricity consumers.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what action he is taking to evaluate the effect of acid emissions from Irish power stations on the environment in Cumbria and central Wales;

(2) if he will raise with the Republic of Ireland the problems caused to the environment of Great Britain by acid emissions from Irish power stations.

Mr. Waldegrave: Estimates by the Department of Trade and Industry's Warren Spring laboratory indicate that acid emissions from Irish power stations are responsible for a negligible proportion of total deposition in Cumbria and central Wales. My right hon. Friend does not consider that emissions from Irish power stations are causing significant environmental problems in Great Britain and he does not consider it necessary to raise the matter with the Government of the Republic of Ireland.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now sign the international declaration supporting a 30 per cent. reduction in acid rain emissions.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the outcome of the recent discussions with the Norwegian Minister of Environment on the subject of acid rain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The discussions with the Norwegian Environment Minister, Mrs. Surlien, during her recent visit to the United Kingdom were helpful in improving mutual understanding of the two Governments' positions in this matter. The need for further reductions in SO2 emissions is common ground, but differences remain about the rate at which they may be achieved.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will direct the London Residuary Body to pay its outstanding telephone and Post Office franking charges.

Mr. Tracey: No. The settlement of its bills is a matter for the London Residuary Body.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the environment how many meetings have taken place between his Department and representatives of the London Residuary Body since 31 March.

Mr. Tracey: Officials meet the LRB frequently to discuss the full range of tasks for which the LRB is responsible. However, not all of these meetings are co-ordinated centrally, and no central record is kept of all the meetings which take place.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will direct the London Residuary Body to answer all reasonable queries from members of the public;

(2) if he will direct the chairman of the London Residuary Body on the matters to be included in its annual report:

(3) why he is not prepared to direct the London Residuary Body to provide information requested by right hon. and hon. Members; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: The conduct of day-to-day affairs of a Residuary Body is a matter for it, and my right hon. Friend would not normally seek to intervene or to act as intermediary between the Residuary Body and those who seek information on its affairs. The power of direction which the Secretary of State has by virtue of Section 65 of the Local Government Act 1985 is a normal feature of legislation setting up non-departmental public bodies, but it is meant as a reserve power rather than a means of regular intervention.

As the principal means of reporting to Parliament on the activities of the residuary bodies, my right hon. Friend will lay their annual reports and statements of accounts before the House when these documents are avaialble; he has no proposals at present to make directions on the contents of residuary bodies' annual reports, but these documents are currently under discussion and the aim will be to ensure that they provide as full an account as necessary.

I am confident that the residuary bodies will themselves provide information in response to all reasonable queries, without the need for a direction from the Secretary of State.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what controls he exercises over the affairs of the London Residuary Body.

Mr. Tracey: The control which my right hon. Friend exercises over residuary bodies are as follows:

—power to establish residuary bodies, appoint chairmen and members and (with Her Majesty's Treasury) determine their remuneration; power, in certain circumstances, to remove a member (section 57 and schedule 13).

—power to approve the purpose for which residuary bodies may borrow money (schedule 13 of the Local Government Act 1972 as applied to residuary bodies by section 75).

—in connection with land, the provisions that:

(a) the acquisition of land by residuary bodies required for the exercise of their functions requires the consent of the Secretary of State (schedule 13 paragraph 7);

(b) disposal of land by residuary bodies is subject to directions and to consent where disposal for less than best price is proposed (schedule 15 paragraph 7);

(c) the Secretary of State has powers to direct disposal of residuary body land (part X of the Local Government Planning and Land Act 1980 as applied to residuary bodies by schedule 13 paragraph 15).

—power to direct a residuary body to recover sums from local authorities which they received in contravention of section 91 (schedule 15).

—power to direct a residuary body in the exercise of its functions (other than management of superannuation) and a duty to publish direction (section 65).

—power to direct the content, form and methodology of residuary bodies' statements of accounts (section 78) and a duty to lay the statements of accounts and any audit reports on them before Parliament (section 79).

—duty to lay the annual reports of residuary bodies before Parliament (schedule 13) and power to require a residuary body to provide information to the Secretary of State relating to the discharge of its functions (schedule 13).

In addition, my right hon. Friend has the following powers (excluding spend provisions):

—power to confer by order on residuary bodies any statutory functions exercisable in relation to property, rights or liabilities they inherit (section 62) and to commute by order smallholdings and housing payments due to residuary bodies (section 64).

—power to provide by order for residuary bodies to make grants to eligible charities out of receipts from land disposal (section 49).

—power to specify by order the description and distribution of money received by residuary bodies (section 77).

—power to provide by order for the transfer or disposal of a residuary body's functions, property, rights and liabilities and give effect to a scheme for its winding up (section 67).

All references to sections and schedules are to the Local Government Act 1985 unless otherwise specified.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the current responsibilities of the London Residuary Body.

Mr. Tracey: The London Residuary Body has the following main responsibilities:

—to make compensation payments to staff of the GLC who were made redundant or employed on less favourable terms at abolition;
—management of the GLC's debt, and superannuation fund;
—to close the GLC accounts;
—to sort out records and files for onward transmission to successor bodies, and to tidy up unfinished business generally;
—to manage inherited property, and unextinguished rights and liabilities not transferred to functional successors;
—to provide certain specialist services, including computer services, scientific services, research and intelligence, and miscellaneous transport services (all at the request of London boroughs), and Urban Traffic Control, on behalf of the Secretary of State for Transport; —to plan the onward transfer, disposal or sale of property and for the continued provision of any of these services that remain necessary after the residuary body has been wound up.

A description of the duties and responsibilities of all residuary bodies is set out in DOE circular 8/86, a copy of which is in the Library.

Hampstead Heath

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements are being made for the future management of Hampstead heath.

Mr. Tracey: The London Residuary Body will propose long-term arrangements for the heath to my right hon. Friend after consultation with the three local authorities within whose areas the land transferred temporarily to the residuary body under the Local Government Act 1985 is located.

Local Government Reform (Residuary Bodies)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many councillors appointed to the residuary bodies are Conservative councillors.

Mr. Tracey: One: Councillor Bowness of the London Residuary Body. Mr. Patnick of the South Yorkshire Residuary Body was formerly a Conservative member of the South Yorkshire county council.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 17 April to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West, if any women were considered for membership of the residuary bodies following abolition of the Greater London council and the metropolitan county councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Ten women were among 220 people considered for appointments to residuary bodies. It would not be appropriate to name individuals, or to discuss why particular individuals were or were not appointed.

Spectrum Centre, Warrington

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment pursuant to the answer of 11 April, Official Report, columns 210-11, if he will publish the management accounts for the Spectrum centre, Warrington, for 1985 and the budget for 1986 including the annual running costs and debt charges when the Spectrum centre is sold; and who will be responsible for the debt charges.

Mr. Tracey: The management accounts for 1985 and the budget for 1986 are working documents of the Birchwood Project (Warrington) Ltd, the company which owns the Spectrum centre. It is for the company to decide whether to publish financial information other than the official accounts which it must make available under companies legislation. The Warrington and Runcorn Development Corporation issued a prospectus earlier this year on behalf of the company inviting offers to take over management or ownership of the Spectrum centre. Responses have to be assessed by the company and the corporation, and decisions will then have to be made on future financial arrangements, including responsibility for debt charges.

Local Authority Expenditure

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much each local authority spent above or below its grant-related expenditure assessment for social services in the last year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information is not readily available. Grant-related expenditure assessments relate to total expenditure as defined in annex A of the rate support grant reports and this definition of expenditure includes an element of capital expenditure and other financing charges which cannot be attributed to individual services.

Self-build Groups

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what assistance Her Majesty's Government gives to self-build groups.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend has approved an arrangement under which the Housing Corporation may guarantee private sector development loans to self build groups at 1 per cent. above base rates. Self-build groups are also entitled to various forms of tax relief and a number of local authorities have been granted special consent to sell them land at a discount.

Roundhouse Black Arts Centre

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will direct the London Residuary Body to provide a similar sum to that pledged by the Greater London council for the Roundhouse Black Arts centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: No. My right hon. Friend has previously made it clear in refusing consent under section 91 of the Local Government Act 1985 in respect of a proposed GLC payment of £6·4 million to the London borough of Camden for the purpose of defraying expenditure on the conversion of the Roundhouse, that he was not satisfied that the expenditure would be expedient or in the interests of London's ratepayers. Decisions on funding the Roundhouse are now a matter for successor authorities.

Teviot Housing Estate, Tower Hamlets

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury on 17 April, what are his reasons for not placing in the Library copies of correspondence between his Department's Urban Housing Renewal Unit and Tower Hamlets borough council.

Sir George Young: It is not normal practice to publish correspondence between the Department and other people and I see no reason to depart from convention in this instance.

Chair of State

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the Chair of State to be returned permanently to the Palace of Westminster; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I shall answer this question shortly.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Dental Health

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to fund a research programme into the relationship between sugar consumption and children's dental health; if any evidence is available to him of any variation in this relationship according to different types of sugar; what information he has about levels of sugar consumption in other European Economic Community countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: A large body of evidence already exists linking the consumption of sugar with dental caries in children. There are, therefore, no plans at present to fund further research in this area. A number of researchers have concluded that of the various sugars sucrose is the type most likely to cause tooth decay. The total sugar consumption (both food and non-food) in the countries of the European Economic Community for the year October 1984-September 1985 was as follows:

	Tonnes
Denmark	192,000
Federal Republic of Germany	2,202,000
Greece	293,000
France	1,907,000
Ireland	136,000
Italy	1,641,000
Netherlands	560,000
Belgium and Luxembourg	355,000
United Kingdom	2,268,000

Child Care Law

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether Her Majesty's Government have completed their consideration of the responses to the child care law review consultative document published in September 1985; whether it has been decided to legislate to assist young people leaving care with housing difficulties they may encounter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The Government are still considering the nearly 200 responses to the consultative document "Review of Child Care Law".

Dentists

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether he will list for each of the years 1976 to 1985 the number of dentists who qualified in the United Kingdom and the numbers in these years who subsequently entered the general dental services;

(2) how many dentists during the years 1976 to 1985 entered the United Kingdom by immigration from the EEC, Commonwealth countries and elsewhere; and how many of these entered general dental services;

(3) how many dentists left the general dental services in the years 1976 to 1985 and in relation to the numbers entering the services in these years; and what was the net increase or decrease to the services in each of the years.

Mr. Hayhoe: The information requested is given in the tables.

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the average amounts scheduled per dentist in the general dental service of the National Health Service in the quarters October to December [illegible]5 and January to March 1986; and what were the equivalent amounts in the corresponding quarters of the preceding five years.

Mr. Hayhoe: The information requested is given in the table in respect of England and Wales. Information for quarter January-March 1986 is not yet available.

Dental Services

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when last he met representatives from the British Dental Association and the General Dental Council, respectively; what personnel were present at the meetings; and what topics were discussed.

Mr. Hayhoe: I met representatives of the British Dental Association including its chairman of council and chairman of its General Dental Services Committee on 4 February this year to discuss dental charges. I met representatives of the General Dental Council, including its president, on 26 November 1985 to discuss the council's reaction to the report of the Director General of Fair Trading into dental services. Officials from my Department and the organisations concerned were present on both occasions.

Retirement

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received in support of a flexible decade of retirement from the age of 55 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. This is because most of the 7,000 or so replies received covered a number of different points and the Green Paper specifically sought views on a flexible decade of retirement between the ages of 60 and 70.

The response to the suggestion for a decade of retirement was largely favourable, but, as we made clear in our White Paper, there were no suggestions as to how this might be achieved without unacceptably high initial cost. We shall, nevertheless, continue to examine possible ways of achieving a flexible decade of retirement between the ages of 60 and 70.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current average budget of a community health council in England; and if he will give comparable figures in real terms over the last five years.

Mr. Hayhoe: The available information on community health council expenditure is set out in the table. It is not possible to provide comparable data for the years prior to 1982-83 because of the changes in health authority and community health council boundaries in 1982

Average expenditure per Community Health Council

Dental Estimates Board

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many estimates were scheduled by the Dental Estimates Board in the months of January, February and March 1986 and in the corresponding months of 1981 to 1985.

Mr. Hayhoe: The following table shows the number of estimates scheduled by the Dental Estimates Board to dentists in England in the months requested.

	January	February	March
1981	2,390,460	2,332,265	2,413,792
1982	2,297,985	2,429,831	2,492,443
1983	2,266,524	2,477,485	2,667,108
1984	2,397,011	2,586,810	2,605,121
1985	2,541,966	2,604,158	2,644,347
1986	2,651,223	2,580,589	2,681,575

Housing Benefit Scheme

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he proposes any changes in the administration of the housing benefit scheme.

Mr. Major: There are no plans to change the general arrangements under which local authorities are responsible for the administration of the housing benefits scheme. Minor changes to detailed procedures will always be necessary from time to time and a number of more significant changes will result from the Government's plans for reforming the housing benefits scheme set out in the White Paper on the reform of social security (Cmnd. 9691).

NHS (Overseas Visitors)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, further to his answer of 16 December 1985, Official Report, column 70, on what basis the original £6 million estimate for charges on overseas visitors using National Health Service facilities was arrived at; and what factors have been responsible for this figure proving to be a substantial overestimate.

Mr. Hayhoe: I understand that the original estimate was based on the assumption that overseas visitors, whose numbers could reasonably be predicted, would use National Health Service hospital services at much the same level as an equivalent cross-section of the population of this country. The subsequent ruling that overseas students on courses of over six months' duration should be regarded as ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom, and not therefore liable to pay as overseas visitors, reduced the potential numbers. Forecast income was reduced on this account by £1 million.

The assumption on use of services by those remaining liable to pay as overseas visitors has proved wrong, possibly for two reasons. First, they may opt to be treated as private patients in the National Health Service, where the charges are similar, or elsewhere. Secondly the imposition of charges is likely in itself to have limited the demand for elective treatment.

CEGB (Radiation Casualties)

Mr. Normanton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many members of the general public have (a) died and (b) been seriously injured from radiation emananting from nuclear establishments of the Central Electricity Generating Board.

Mr. Whitney: On the basis of current evidence, I am advised that there is no established link between these establishments and the incidence of disease in population near to them.

Health Education Council

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place in the Library a copy of the minutes of the meeting he had with the Health Education Council on 17 March.

Mr. Whitney: No. The minutes include a record of discussions about proposed future health promotional activities which it would be premature to disclose.

Action on Alcohol Abuse (Minutes of Meetings)

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place in the Library a copy of the minutes of the meetings between officials of his Department and representatives from Action on Alcohol Abuse on 21 January, 1983 and 18 July 1985.

Mr. Whitney: I do not consider it appropriate to place in the Library a copy of the notes of officials' meetings.

Pensions

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate for the decade following 1988 the likely number of contributors opting out of the state earnings related pensions scheme for membership of (a) an occupational scheme or (b) a personal pension.

Mr. Newton: The Government's pension reforms are intended to result in a major expansion of the coverage of occupational and personal pension schemes. However, as there are no precedents for the new pension options, it is not possible to make reliable estimates of likely increases in the number of people contracting out from the State earnings-related pension scheme for the decade following 1988.

James Kay

Mr. Dickens asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will initiate an urgent inquiry into the original release of James Kay (alias Lang) a convicted child murderer, under licence from Park Lane mental institution, who was sentenced at Lancaster Crown court on 14 April to six years' imprisonment for two subsequent serious assaults; and if he will review the system by which such potentially dangerous patients are released.

Mr. Whitney: Mr. Kay was discharged by a mental health review tribunal. The tribunals are independent bodies with a duty in cases such as these to order discharge of a patient detained in a mental hospital for treatment where they are satisfied that the patient is not suffering from mental disorder as defined by the Mental Health Act 1983. Tribunals dealing with restricted patients are presided over by a judge and include a medical and a lay member. The tribunal reached its conclusion having regard to substantial medical evidence from numerous sources that Mr. Kay was no longer suffering from mental disorder requiring him to be detained in hospital for treatment. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is considering whether there are any lessons to be learned from this case, including the subsequent conviction of Mr. Kay for serious criminal offences.

Alcohol Abuse

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the voluntary bodies he has met in the last 12 months to discuss alcohol abuse.

Mr. Whitney: My right hon. Friend, the Minister for Health opened Alcohol Concern's new premises on 25 September 1985 and had informal discussions with members of Alcohol Concern. There have been no other meetings with a voluntary body to discuss alcohol abuse in the last 12 months.

Alcoholism

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy towards the prevention and treatment of alcoholism, in the light of the report "An Agenda for Action on Alcohol", a copy of which has been forwarded to him.

Mr. Whitney: I am aware of the proposals set out in "Agenda for Action on Alcohol Abuse", many of which are primarily the responsibility of other Departments. Government policy on the prevention and treatment of alcohol misuse remains as set out in the discussion document "Drinking Sensibly", which the Health Departments issued in 1981. That document made a number of suggestions for the development of appropriate future strategies for combating alcohol misuse, many of which have already been adopted or are currently being developed.

Pharmaceutical Industry

Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services from the latest annual financial returns submitted by pharmaceutical companies, what the profitability level of the industry as a whole is; and how this compares with the target set for the pharmaceutical industry by his Department.

Mr. Hayhoe: In 1983, the latest year for which information is readily available, the declared profit for companies submitting annual financial returns was about 14½ per cent. on (historic) capital employed. The Department's assessment, after disallowing certain costs and making other adjustments, was higher and in line with the target set for the industry by the Department.

Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the deadline for pharmaceutical companies to make their annual financial returns to his Department each year.

Mr. Hayhoe: Companies are asked to submit their annual financial returns not later than six months after the end of their accounting year. This time limit may be extended by agreement between the Department and a company.

Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many pharmaceutical companies exceeded their promotional targets for the last year for which figures are available; how many of these companies were required to pay a penalty rate for exceeding those targets; and whether, without naming the companies concerned, he will state the amounts of excess for each company concerned.

Mr. Hayhoe: The requirement to repay excess expenditure incurred on sales promotion was introduced only from 1 April 1984. A full year's figures since then are not yet available. To date, however, four companies have been required to repay excess sales promotion expenditure of £453,000, £135,000, £53,000 and £15,000.

Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the value of applications by pharmaceutical companies disallowed for price increases under the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme for each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Hayhoe: Information on the value of price increase applications disallowed is not routinely collected. However, for the fiscal year 1985-86 it is estimated that price increases disallowed exceeded £55 million.

Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total expenditure on pharmaceuticals (a) including dispensing costs and (b) excluding dispensing costs made by his Department for the last year in which figures are available; and by how the Department's own estimates compare with figures supplied by pharmaceutical companies in their annual financial returns.

Mr. Hayhoe: The information for England in the financial year 1984-85 is:

Drugs Expenditure: (£ million)

	Family Practitioner Services	Hospital and Community Health Services	Total
(a) Inclusive of dispensing costs	1,553	*	*
(b) Exclusive of dispensing costs	1,194	279	1,473

* Information on dispensing costs in the Health and Community Health Services is not available centrally.

The pharmaceutical companies' annual financial returns are used in conjunction with the Department's various estimates of drug expenditure, although no direct arithmetic comparison is possible. Individual company annual financial returns are based on total sales to the National Health Service in the United Kingdom and their financial years all differ from each other and our financial year.

Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many pharmaceutical companies received more than £75 million from the National Health Service for medicines for the last year for which figures are available; and if he will name them.

Mr. Hayhoe: In 1984, three pharmaceutical companies had sales in excess of £75 million to the National Health Service for medicines. For reasons of commercial confidence individual companies results are not identified.

Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what schemes are run by his Department to seek to encourage pharmaceutical companies to undertake research in therapeutic areas which are unlikely to have high profit potential;

(2) what steps he has taken to seek to ensure that innovation and research within the pharmaceutical industry is directed towards identified therapeutic need.

Mr. Charles Morrison asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action Her Majesty's Government are taking to promote more pharmaceutical research by British and foreign companies in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hayhoe: Because of favourable conditions, a relatively high proportion of world pharmaceutical research and development is carried out in the United Kingdom. Under the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme companies are allowed, within reasonable limits, to reflect their current research and development costs in the prices of National Health Service medicines. In common with other industrial sectors, pharmaceutical companies may also qualify for specific assistance under schemes administered by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. My Department does not intervene in the companies' choice of therapeutic areas in which to research.

Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what criteria his Department uses when deciding to prosecute a pharmaceutical company under the terms of the Medicines Act 1968 and 1978 in relation to alleged promotional malpractice.

Mr. Hayhoe: There is a wide-ranging spectrum of possible offences under the terms of the Medicines Act relating to promotional activity and these controls are enforced in whichever way seems most appropriate, including prosecution where necessary. Some offences may be purely technical, others may amount to deliberate misrepresentation. Each individual case is therefore considered on its merits taking account of such factors as potential danger for patients, and the conduct of the company concerned, as well as the strength of the evidence. Regard may also be had to any action taken under the pharmaceutical industry's own regulatory procedures, since these may provide a very effective and speedy means of control in certain types of case.

Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he still operates a grey area policy for profitability for pharmaceutical companies in the National Health Service business; how many companies recorded profits falling within the grey area as last defined; how many companies exceeded the grey area as last defined and by how much; and whether he will name the companies falling, within or exceeding, the grey area.

Mr. Hayhoe: Under the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme companies may be allowed to retain, within prescribed limits (grey area), profits earned in excess of their target. In 1983, the latest year for which information is available, nine companies recorded profits in excess of target and all fell within the grey area. For reason of commercial confidence individual company results are not revealed.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment he has made of the implications for employment in the pharmaceutical industry of (a) the introduction of the limited list of drugs and (b) the new pharmaceutical price agreement; what representations he has received on this subject; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) on 10 March at column 377. Negotiations are still proceeding with the Association of British Pharmaceutical Industry on the renewal of the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme.

General Practitioners

Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many unrestricted principal general practitioners currently practice in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hayhoe: A total of 24,036 unrestricted principal general practitioners were in practice in England on 1 October 1985. Figures for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Medicines Acts (Infringements)

Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many prosecutions his Department has undertaken since 1980 for infringements of the Medicines Acts 1968 and 1979; and what the outcome has been of those prosecutions.

Mr. Hayhoe: Since 1980, my Department has prosecuted 19 defendants involving companies and others, for a number of offences under the Medicines Act 1968. The results of the cases are shown in the table; all prosecutions have been successful. In addition, proceedings have been started in a further five cases. Three of these involved alleged sale or supply of medicines without product licences, one the alleged incorrect labelling of a product and one the issue of an alleged misleading advertisement.

In four of these cases the facts have yet to be heard by magistrates' courts and one case has been committed by magistrates to the central criminal court.

Medicines (Code of Practice)

Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the codes of practice relating to the promotion of prescription only medicines to general practitioners, and the organisations administering those codes.

Mr. Hayhoe: The only code of practice relating to the promotion of prescription medicines is produced by the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry—the trade association representing manufacturers of these products. The code is comprehensive and covers promotion to all medical and dental practitioners. Its requirements are consistent with the Medicines Act regulations governing the advertising of medicines. Administration of the code is by a committee, under an independent, legally qualified chairman. The committee's findings are published regularly. A new edition of the code together with the constitution and procedure of the committee has just been published. I have arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library.

Regional Medical Officers

Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many regional medical officers have left their employment with his Department to take up positions of employment within the pharmaceutical industry within the last 10 years; and how many regional medical officers currently employed have had any previous experience in employment within the pharmaceutical industry.

Mr. Whitney: I am informed that no regional medical officer has resigned to join the pharmaceutical industry over the last 10 years and no regional medical officer currently employed has a background in the pharmaceutical industry.

Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many regional medical officers have been employed by his Department in the field of providing prescribing advice to general practitioners in the last year and for the last five years; whether there are any plans to increase the total number of regional medical officers in this work; and how many regional officers serve each region of the National Health Service.

Mr. Whitney: There are about 40 regional medical officers who visit general practitioners to discuss prescribing although this work takes only about 10 per cent. of their time. These figures have remained constant over the last five years and there are no plans at present to expand their activity. Each region is served by between two and four doctors.

Pharmaceuticals (Promotion)

Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the global sum spent by the pharmaceutical industry on promoting prescription only medicines to the National Health Service as a whole and to general practitioners for the last year for which figures are available; and by how much this exceeded the global target for the industry as a whole set by his Department;

(2) from the latest annual financial returns of pharmaceutical companies, what is the proportion of actual expenditure as a percentage of total promotional expenditure made on representatives promoting products.

Mr. Hayhoe: In 1983, the latest year for which information is readily available, companies submitting annual financial returns spent £169 million on promoting the sales of medicines to the National Health Service, of which the cost of representatives was about 44 per cent. This exceeded target by £30 million, which was treated as notional profit for the purposes of the pharmaceutical price regulations scheme. Separate figures for expenditure on promotion to general practitioners are not available.

Health Authorities (Laundry Contracts)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many district health authorities have awarded their contracts for laundry services to in-house staff and how many to outside private contractors; and if he is satisfied with the tender procedures which have been implemented.

Mr. Whitney: A total of 16 district health authorities have awarded a total of 19 laundry contracts to private contractors. Fifty six in-house laundry tenders have been successful, in 52 district health authorities. We are satisfied with the tendering procedures carried out in most authorities but it has been necessary for the Department to intervene in a small number of cases. Further general advice on tendering for laundry services was included in a letter of 3 January 1986 from Victor Paige, chairman of the National Health Service Management Board, to all regional health authority chairmen. A copy of this letter was placed in the Library.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will state for each of the last five years for which figures are available for mobility allowance applications: (a) the number of applications, (b) the number of approvals, (c) the number of appeals and (d) the number of successful appeals.

Mr. Newton: The information is as follows. It relates to decisions given in the relevant years, not to the results of claims made in those years.

For 1982 onwards such figures are shown seperately in brackets marked* but included in the total.
Columns (3) to (6) Figures include renewal claims.

Family Forum Charity (Exhibition)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Family Forum Charity to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Hayhoe: I understand that arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 12-16 May.

Adoption and Fostering (Press Advertising)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what his Department's policy is on the advertising of children through the press for adoption or fostering;

(2) whether his Department has issued any guidelines on the advertising of children for adoption and fostering;

(3) whether he has received any recent representations concerning the advertising of children for fostering and adoption.

Mr. Whitney: Press advertisements are used by many local authorities and adoption agencies as a means of finding families for children who cannot be placed by other means. This method has proved of value in finding new families, and the public generally has become aware of the needs of children in care who are waiting for families. The advertising of children does need to be handled with care and sensitivity and backed up with skilled professional social work.

I am aware of concern about the wording used in one recent case where an advertisement in respect of a ward of court was placed, with the agreement of the High Court. This case is a matter for the local authority and the High Court, and not one on which I should comment.

I understand that British Agencies for Adoption and Fostering and the National Foster Care Association intend to produce guidelines on advertising of children. I welcome this joint initiative to help agencies to use publicity in a way that is most beneficial to the children concerned.

Driving Licences (Medical Refusals)

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what rights to benefits exist for holders of heavy goods vehicle and public service vehicle licences whose licences are terminated for medical reasons; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what rights holders of heavy goods vehicle and public service vehicle licences, whose licences are terminated for medical reasons, have to register for employment and receive unemployment benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: No specific benefits are available for holders of heavy goods vehicle and public service vehicle licences, whose licences are terminated for medical reasons. Incapacity benefits would be available where the person satisfied the usual criteria of incapacity. Alternatively, if such a person lost his employment he would be able to claim unemployment benefit in the usual way, subject to the normal conditions of being capable of and available for work.

Pharmaceutical Research

Mr. Charles Morrison asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on comparable pharmaceutical research costs (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in other OECD countries.

Mr. Hayhoe: My Department does not maintain comparative data on pharmaceutical research costs in OECD countries.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will accede to representations for the retrospective payment of exceptionally severe weather allowances for eligible claimants who paid their fuel bills before his Department advertised the availability of the benefits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The determination of claims for exceptionally severe weather payments is a matter for the independent adjudication officers, and I refer the hon. Member to the guidance on this subject issued by the chief adjudication officer on 6 December 1985, a copy of which is in the Library. We shall be reviewing the exceptionally severe weather provisions further in the light of this winter's experience.

Public Bodies (Departmental Support)

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much money was paid by his Department to support (a) the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work, (b) the General Medical Council and (c) the United Kingdom Nursing Board in each of the latest three years for which figures are available; and what proportion of the total costs of these bodies each of those contributions represented.

Mr. Hayhoe: The information requested in respect of the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work, the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting and the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting is set out in the table. The Department does not pay a grant to the General Medical Council which is a self-financing independent statutory body.

Mentally Handicapped People

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he proposes to recruit a director for the national development team for mentally handicapped people; and what will be the future role and structure of the team.

Mr. Hayhoe: Advertisements to recruit a new director for the national development team are now being published in national newspapers and a range of professional journals. I pay tribute to the work of the first director, Dr. Gerry Simon, and to his successor, Dr. George Kerr, who gave up his appointment prematurely because of ill health. I also pay a particular tribute to the acting director, Mr. Jim Gardner, and his associate director, Mrs. Lotte Mason, who are seeing the team through an interregnum and introducing substantial improvements in the management of its business—to give the new director a firm basis on which to build.

The team has a crucial role at a time of major change in the services for mentally handicapped people and their families. It will continue to provide independent expert advice to health and local authorities on the development and operation of their mental handicap services in relation to current Government policy and priorities and information to Ministers about the state of current services, the nature and direction of change, and the implications for Government policies.

The strength of the team lies in the wide experience of its panel members from their vantage points as service providers and service users, able to commend good practice from personal experience; and to make a realistic and balanced assessment of local needs.

The Government's policy is that there should be good local services, capable of responding flexibly to differing needs and circumstances and provided by a variety of agencies working together in both the planning and delivery of services. They should be able to identify and to meet both the general and the special needs of mentally handicapped people and their families. We are talking about our relatives, friends and next door neighbours; but the better we know people the more keenly are we aware that they are all different and that standard packages will not do. The only right answers are relevant ones, flexible enough to change with changing needs—and where necessary to promote change. The team's wide experience of what is possible is invaluable.

The new director is expected to lead a team with a role and structure much as now, but with greater emphasis on establishing and promulgating good practice; on promoting co-operation between all those involved where accountabilities meet, and even sometimes properly overlap; and on looking, during visits and in developing guidelines and informing Ministers, at specific issues of key importance to the overall service. The team cannot be expected to carry out in-depth inspections of every aspect of a service. This is the continuing responsibility of local management and of consumer groups. The team can help by advising on monitoring mechanisms and on quality criteria.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give a breakdown of the geographical deployment of the additional 5,000 staff which he recently announced.

Mr. Major: No decisions have yet been finalised but I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Spectacles (Voucher Scheme)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if the voucher scheme for spectacles for partially sighted children will enable the purchase of two sets of spectacles with light-sensitive lenses where these are required; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: A consultant ophthalmologist in the hospital eye service can prescribe any items which he considers in his clinical judgment to be medically necessary for his patient. That principle will not be affected by the introduction of the voucher system. From 1 July children will be entitled to vouchers which are intended to provide them with basic pairs of spectacles to meet their clinical needs.

Organ Donation

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the number of occasions on which requests for organ donation were refused by next-of-kin or close relatives in the past 12 months.

Mr. Whitney: We have no information on this.

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many deaths of persons aged between 20 and 65 years occurred during the past 12 months; and how many of those he estimates might have been suitable as kidney or other organ donors.

Mr. Whitney: In 1984, the most recent year for which figures are available, the number of deaths of persons aged between 20 and 65 in the United Kingdom was 133,372. It is estimated that about 2,000 patients die in the United Kingdom each year in circumstances where brain death might be diagnosed. Patients who are diagnosed as brain dead may be suitable as organ donors but we do not have a breakdown into age groups of these 2,000 patients. As part of our campaign to increase the number of donor organs becoming available for transplantation we are considering supporting a study which would seek to establish how many brain deaths occur and what might be done to increase the proportion where organ donation procedures are initiated.

Benefits

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much a single 22-year-old male (a) living with parents and (b) living in a council flat received in benefit if he was unemployed on 1 April in each year between 1979 and 1986; and if he will express these payments in real terms, taking 100 as the base for 1 April 1979.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 10 April 1986, c. 189]: The information available is as follows:

	Unemployment benefit		Supplementary benefit
			Living with parents		As tenant of council flat

‡ Information for 1986 not yet available.

As these figures are based on comparisons between dates other than uprating dates, they may be misleading. An unemployed person may be entitled to either unemployment benefit or supplementary benefit or a combination of both. Supplementary benefit can be increased to cater for certain additional expenses such as extra heating. A tenant of a council flat could also be entitled to housing benefit, and a 22-year-old claimant living with his parents receiving supplementary benefit on the dates in the question would be entitled to a contribution towards housing costs.

Health Authorities and Family Practitioner Committees

27. Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the information which was routinely collected from health authorities and family practitioner committees at the time of his answer of 15 July 1985, Official Report, columns 60-63, which is no longer collected, giving in each case the reason for stopping.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 14 April 1986, c. 288]: Of the forms which were routinely collected from health authorities and family practitioner committees, listed in my predecessor's answer on 15 July 1985, at columns 60-63 the following are no longer collected:—

Reference
HMR1 (IP)	Hospital inpatient inquiry
HMR1 (IP)	Hospital activity analysis
HMR1 (Mat)	Hospital inpatient inquiry maternity
HIP 1B	Hospital inpatient inquiry maternity

These forms were discontinued from 31 December 1985 pending the introduction of a new system for providing information about hospital clinical activity as recommended by the steering group on health services information.

DEFENCE

British Nuclear Tests

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Defence, following atomic weapons trial tests in the 1950s, what details are available showing the number of officers and men who have died (a) prematurely and (b) of cancer.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Christchurch (Mr. Adley) on 25 March 1986, at column 462. The National Radiological Protection Board is currently conducting a study into mortality among those who participated in the United Kingdom atmospheric nuclear weapon test programme, compared with a matched group who did not. It is also intended to examine cancer registrations.

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Defence what instances of genetic abnormalities in first and second generations have been noted in the families of those exposed to atomic weapons trials tests.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I am not aware of any valid evidence of a higher incidence of hereditary defects (sometimes referred to as congenital abnormalities) in the offspring of participants, than occurs in the United Kingdom population as a whole. I am confident that the study currently being undertaken by the National Radiological Protection Board, which is analysing mortality and morbidity data, is the best way forward to determine whether participants were disadvantaged. I will consider the need for further action in the light of the study's findings.

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) during atomic weapon trials in the 1950s, how many officers and men were exposed to atomic radiation tests with protective equipment;

(2) during atomic weapon trials in the 1950s, how many officers and men were exposed to atomic radiation tests without protective equipment.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) on 15 January 1985, at column 84 and the answer I gave to the right hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Harrison) on 2 December 1985, at column 92. These apply not only to the Christmas Island tests, but to the nuclear test programmes conducted in or near the Australian continent.

Armscor (South Africa)

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions took place between members of his Department and Armscor (South Africa) at the FIDA international air show in Santiago on 10 March.

Mr. Norman Lamont: A member of the defence attache's staff visited the Armscor (South Africa) stand amongst others while visiting the air show, but no discussions took place.

Fisheries Protection

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what instructions have been given to the Royal Navy about the apprehension of English fishing vessels alleged to be in contravention of the Inshore Fishing (Prohibition of Carriage of Monofilament Gill Nets) (Scotland) Order 1986.

Mr. Stanley: Under present arrangements vessels operated by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland carry out fishery protection duties in waters to which the Inshore Fisheries (Scotland) Act 1984 applies. The Royal Navy is not currently involved in this. Were the Royal Navy to carry out patrols in these waters in future, instructions on fisheries regulations would be issued by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland.

Crown Proceedings Act

Mr. Churchill asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he is yet in a position to say when he intends to publish the results of his review of the Crown Proceedings Act as it relates to service personnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I cannot at present add to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend on 19 March 1986, at columns 208-9.

RAF Upper Heyford

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the flying activity which took place on 14 April at RAF Upper Heyford was the exercise of which the Minister of State for Defence Support gave prior notice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: A routine exercise took place at RAF Upper Heyford between 14 and 17 April, in line with the prior notification given by my noble Friend the Minister for Defence Support. This had no connection with other operations from the station in that period.

Warsaw Pact-NATO (Manpower Equivalents)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give his Department's best estimate of the relative numbers of (a) Warsaw pact and (b) North Atlantic Treaty Organisation manpower division equivalents which would be able to be deployed four days after mobilisation in the case of a two-front attack in the central front.

Mr. Stanley: My Department does not use manpower division equivalents in calculations of the balance of forces between Warsaw pact and NATO.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Defence if any special security measures are envisaged to safeguard any site chosen for the dumping of nuclear waste from nuclear submarines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: In the event that the Ministry of Defence establishes a coastal facility for the disposal of reactor compartments from decommissioned nuclear submarines, the advice of the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate would be sought on the measures necessary to ensure the safety of the public.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will specify the special factors which render a site suitable for the storage of nuclear waste material from nuclear submarines.

Mr. Lee: A coastal location.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Members for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) and for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 28 February, Official Report, column 710, if any consideration has been given in the search for suitable sites for disposing of reactor compartments from nuclear submarines to sites not owned by his Department; what geological survey work will be required for this purpose; how long it will take; and whether this will be done by special development order.

Mr. Lee: Consideration of suitable sites, in case a separate facility is required, has been limited to sites owned by the Ministry of Defence. No short list of possible sites has yet been drawn up. The nature and extent of any geological survey work required will depend on which sites are chosen and will be subject to normal planning procedures. Any development of a facility at a particular site would be subject to a public inquiry.

9 Signals Regiment

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence on what date (a) the Attorney-General's office, (b) the office of the Director of Public Prosecutions and (c) the Special Branch were first informed that service men of 9 Signals Regiment were being questioned over a possible breach of security at United Kingdom bases in Cyprus.

Mr. Younger: (a) On or about 24 February 1984. (b) 23 February 1984. (c) 12 March 1984.

Cruise Missiles

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the interruption of a British military exercise on Salisbury Plain on Thursday 10 April due to the arrival of a United States cruise convoy.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No British military exercise was interrupted on Salisbury Plain on the day in question.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the British Government were consulted about the decision to bring out a cruise convoy from Greenham Common on Thursday 10 April.

Mr. Stanley: Arrangements for all off-base cruise missile exercises in this country are agreed by the relevant British and United States authorities.

Multi-launch Rocket System

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the latest position on the multi-launch rocket system project.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) on 30 January 1986, at column 630.

Polaris

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he remains satisfied with the reliability of the Polaris warhead.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Yes.

Partial Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence if Her Majesty's Government have any plans to withdraw from the partial test ban treaty.

Mr. Renton: I have been asked to reply.
No.

Small Businesses

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the value of contracts placed by his Department with small businesses in each of the financial years since 1978-79; and what percentage of total expenditure on purchases of goods and services those amounts represented.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 18 April 1986, c. 523]: For the years 1983-84 and 1984-85 payments by my Department directly to small firms for purchases of goods and services, and the percentages of total expenditure which these purchases represent are as follows:

	1983-84 expenditure		1984-85 expenditure
	£ million	Percentage	£ million	Percentage
Firms with up to 50 employees	307	4·8	315	4·4
Firms with up to 200 employees	787	12·2	827	11·5

This information was not collected before 1983-84 and the figures for 1985-86 are not yet available. These figures take no account of the significant amount of work awarded to small firms on a sub-contract basis.

WALES

Agricultural Development and Advisory Service

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many of those employed by the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service in Wales are Welsh-speaking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The number employed by the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service in Wales who are Welsh-speaking is 121.

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are employed by the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service in Wales; what were the corresponding figures for the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The number of people employed by the Agricultural Development Advisory Service in Wales on 1 April 1986 (the latest available date) is 347·5.

The information for 1 April in earlier years is as follows:

	Number
1977	433
1978	434½
1979	453½
1980	444½

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Rabbit Population

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has about the current size of the rabbit population and about the trend in its growth.

Mrs. Fenner: The latest estimate available suggests that the present rabbit population in England and Wales is about 20 million. Without a greater control effort by occupiers of land, increased resistance to myxomatosis is likely to lead to an upward trend in rabbit numbers.

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment his Department has made of the scope for promoting an increase in the human consumption of rabbits as an alternative to pest control methods for the restriction of the rabbit population.

Mrs. Fenner: I do not regard human consumption of wild rabbits as a sufficient means of population control, or as a true alternative to the control of the species as a pest. The surplus over any given consumption level is properly regarded as a pest population. Nor is my Department authorised to promote the consumption of one type of meat in preference to another.

Farm Rents

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing average farm rents in £ per hectare and as a percentage of 1975 in each of the years 1981 to 1985 and at the latest available date.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 21 April 1986]: The average farm rents and percentage change over the 1975 level in England for the calendar years 1981 to 1985 are as follows:

	Average Rent (£ per hectare)	Percentage change over 1975
1975	20·26	—
1981	*58·36	+188
1982	*66·14	+226

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teachers (Salaries)

Sir Peter Hordern asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table showing the cost of teachers' salaries each year since 1978, in England; what is the average increase per teacher each year since that date; and if he will express the expenditure on teachers' salaries as a proportion of total expenditure on primary and secondary education.

Sir Keith Joseph: The table contains the information. The figures are presented in cash and real terms and they refer to maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in England.

Lancashire County Council

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what Lancashire country council's education capital expenditure allocation was at outturn and at constant prices in each year from 1981-82 to 1986-87; and what was the original bid received by his Department for each year.

Nursery Education

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many nursery schools or nursery classes were opened in 1985 and how many were closed.

Mr. Dunn: This information is not collected centrally.

School Curriculum

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are his conclusions following his consultations on the place of economic awareness within the school curriculum.

Sir Keith Joseph: I continue to hold strongly to the view, expressed in paragraph 71 of the White Paper "Better Schools", that some awareness by school pupils of economic matters is a prerequisite for citizenship and employment. I am encouraged, therefore, that the consultations indicate much support for my view that all pupils should be equipped with some economic awareness and understanding by the time they reach the age of 16. Accordingly I have today invited the School Curriculum Development Committee, in what I regard as a fitting initiative for Industry Year, to consider what additional development work it might encourage and support in this area of the curriculum; copies of the Department's letter have been placed in the Library.

EMPLOYMENT

Tourism (Royal Wedding)

6. Mr. Dicks asked the Paymaster General whether he has made any estimate of the possible increase in tourists visiting the United Kingdom as a result of the royal wedding taking place on 23 July.

Mr. Trippier: The royal wedding will undoubtedly have a beneficial effect on the number of visitors to the United Kingdom, not only for this summer, but in the longer term. I expect it to show to best advantage many of the aspects of Britain which attract visitors. The pageantry, ceremonial, and tradition, combined with a youthful image and vitality. It is not, however, possible to estimate these benefits in terms of visitor numbers or revenue.

Job Creation

10. Mr. David Marshall asked the Paymaster General what is his latest estimate of the number of jobs which will be created indirectly as a result of the job creation measures announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget statement.

72. Mr. Jim Callaghan asked the Paymaster General how many new full-time jobs he expects will flow from the recent employment measures announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

85. Mr. Haynes asked the Paymaster General how many new full-time jobs he expects to flow from the recent employment measures announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The precise effect of our wide-ranging measures to encourage enterprise and employment and to provide help to long-term unemployed people will depend on how employers, entrepreneurs and others respond to them.

Pre-strike Ballots

16. Dr. Twinn asked the Paymaster General what information he has as to the number of pre-strike ballots that have taken place since the implementation of the Trade Union Act 1984.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are aware of about 170 pre-strike ballots which we believe have complied with the provisions of the Trade Union Act 1984, but there will have beeen other ballots which we do not know about.

Labour Statistics

17. Mr. Foulkes asked the Paymaster General what proportion of the total unemployed in the United Kingdom have been unemployed for over six months; and how this figure compares with the equivalent statistics in May 1979.

Mr. Lang: On 9 January 1986, the latest date for which figures are available, the proportion of claimants who have been unemployed for over six months in the United Kingdom was 57 per cent. It is difficult to make a comparison with April 1979 (no figures are available for May) because of changes in the way figures are collected. However, the proportion of registrants who had been unemployed for over six months was 47 per cent.

23. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Paymaster General what has been the increase in unemployment over the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Between March 1985 and March 1986, seasonally adjusted unemployment, excluding school leavers and adjusted for discontinuities, increased by 102,900 in the United Kingdom.

51. Mr. Flannery asked the Paymaster General what is the latest figure of the unemployed in the United Kingdom.

61. Mr. Parry asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the latest unemployment figures.

79. Sir John Farr asked the Paymaster General what is the total number of unemployed persons at the latest available date.

Mr. Lang: On 6 March 1986, the number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom was 3,323,776.

60. Mr. James Hamilton asked the Paymaster General what is the present rate of unemployment; and how this compares with the figure in March 1979.

Mr. Lang: On 6 March 1986, the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate, excluding school leavers, was 13·2 per cent. in the United Kingdom. The corresponding unemployment rate for March 1979 was 4·9 per cent.

62. Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Paymaster General what is his latest estimate of the total effect on the unemployment figures of the job creation measures announced in the Budget statement in their first year of operation.

Mr. Lang: I do not have any such estimates. For the reasons referred to in my right hon. and learned Friend's reply earlier today to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Shettleston (Mr. Marshall).

68. Mr. Wareing asked the Paymaster General how many unemployed claimants there are in the Liverpool, West Derby, constituency; and how this compares with the figure for May 1979.

Mr. Lang: On 6 March 1986, the number of unemployed claimants in the Liverpool, West Derby constituency was 9,708. Statistics of unemployment for Parliamentary constituencies are derived from the new ward-based system and are available only from June 1983.

83. Mr. Fisher asked the Paymaster General how many people aged 25 years and under are presently unemployed in the United Kingdom; and what this represents as a percentage of total unemployment.

Mr. Lang: On 9 January 1986, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by age is available, the number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom under 25 years of age was 1,246,892, 36·6 per cent. of the total.

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General how many persons (a) male and (b) female were placed in employment by Burnley and Padiham jobcentres for the last month for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang: Analysis of jobcentre placings by sex is available quarterly. Following is the available information for the period 7 October 1985 to 3 January 1986. These figures exclude placings on Government schemes.

	Male	Female
Burnley	635	726
Padiham	115	218

Retirement Ages

18. Mr. Allen McKay asked the Paymaster General if he has any plans to amend the Sex Discrimination Act in such a way as to equalise the retirement ages of men and women; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The Government issued a consultative document on 1 April, which was placed in the Library of the House, setting out proposals for amending our legislation in the light of the recent European Court judgment concerning sex discrimination and retirement, and inviting comments by 30 April. The proposed amendments will make it unlawful for a woman to be dismissed on the grounds of age when a man of the same age and in comparable circumstances would not. We believe that this represents a desirable extension of equal opportunity in employment.

Inner Cities Initiative

19. Mr. Soames asked the Paymaster General what progress has been made with the inner cities initiative.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Since the initiative was announced on 6 February, we have set up the eight inner-city task forces and the central unit in my Department and started work. We are still establishing contact with the local communities, evaluating proposals being put to us and drawing up plans for action in each of the districts concerned.

39. Mr. Haselhurst asked the Paymaster General what plans he has to encourage links between industry and charitable organisations as part of his inner cities initiative.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The task force we have set up to implement the initiative will aim to involve all sections of the communities it covers in its work. This will certainly include local industry and charities and I hope that direct links between them will be fostered by our work.

Shipbuilding Communities

20. Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Paymaster General what statistics he has relating to unemployment in shipbuilding communities in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lang: An analysis of the claimant count by industry or occupation is not available. The labour force survey provides a national estimate of those unemployed who had previously worked in shipbuilding, but data for local communities are not produced. Monthly figures are available for the total claimant count in individual wards. These are deposited in the Library.

Printing Industry

21. Mr. Nellist asked the Paymaster General how many people are presently employed in the printing industry; and how this compares with the figures for 1975 and 1980, respectively.

Mr. Lang: In December 1985 there were 353,000 employees in employment in the printing and publishing industry in Great Britain.

The corresponding figures for June 1975 and December 1980 were 341,000 and 355,000 respectively.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

22. Mr. Baldry asked the Paymaster General what are the most recent figures for the success rate of the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Trippier: Since its introduction in August 1983, the enterprise allowance scheme has helped almost 134,000 unemployed people to start their own businesses. The latest statistics show that 89 per cent. of those who enter the scheme are still in business at the end of the year in which they receive support. Recent survey evidence has also revealed that 61 per cent. of recipients who received the allowance for a full year were still in business two years after the allowance stopped, and that for every 100 continuing businesses, 99 additional new jobs had been created.

34. Mr. Stanbrook asked the Paymaster General how many franchises have received support under the enterprise allowance scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: No statistics are kept of the number of franchise businesses supported under the enterprise allowance scheme.

The purpose of the allowance is to encourage unemployed people to set up new and independent businesses. Although franchise businesses are not automatically excluded from the scheme, many franchise agreements restrict the franchisee's freedom of action in important aspects such as source of supplies, prices and market area and they cannot therefore be regarded as independent businesses for the purpose of the scheme.

41. Mr. Waller asked the Paymaster General if he will take steps to improve business skills training for those joining the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Trippier: People on the enterprise allowance scheme can take advantage of both public and private sector training, including the provision made available through the Manpower Services Commission's training for enterprise programme. In addition, the Commission has introduced a revised system of induction and follow-up of enterprise allowance participants. This new system will include a one-day self-employment awareness session to replace the present two-hour information session attended by all applicants to the scheme. One of the main purposes of the revised system is to highlight the importance of enterprise training and its benefits to the participants' businesses, as well as providing an introduction to basic business concepts. Follow-up monitoring by the MSC will be enhanced to reinforce the emphasis on training and business counselling for participants.

Mr. Freeman asked the Paymaster General if he has come to a decision as to how the increased number of places available under the enterprise allowance scheme will be distributed around the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trippier: The enterprise allowance scheme applies to Great Britain. There is a similar but separate scheme running in Northern Ireland.

From April 1986, the enterprise allowance scheme has been expanded to 80,000 entrants and places have been distributed by the Manpower Services Commission in accordance with demand, following consultation with MSC regional and area management. From September 1986, the scheme will be increased to an annual rate of 90,000 entrants and again in April 1987 to 100,000. The precise allocations of places will be determined by the MSC after consultation with their regional management.

Enterprise Agencies

24. Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Paymaster General whether he will quantify the effect of enterprise agencies in the creation of employment.

Mr. Trippier: Local enterprise agencies are clearly making a significant contribution to job creation at the local level. The annual reports of individual agencies frequently give details of jobs that the agencies have helped to create or save, but no reliable national figures are yet available. My Department is supporting a survey, currently being undertaken by Business in the Community, which looks at both the support provided to agencies and the work they undertake; this should enable a better overall picture of the impact of agencies to be established.

Industrial Disputes

25. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Paymaster General what information he has as to how many industrial disputes there were over the last 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: A provisional total of 840 stoppages of work due to industrial disputes have been recorded as being in progress in the 12 months to 28 February 1986.

58. Mr. McKelvey asked the Paymaster General what information he has as to how many industrial disputes involving strike action there have been in the public and private sectors, respectively, in the past 12 months.

Mr. Lang: A provisional total of 421 stoppages of work due to industrial disputes in the public sector, and 419 in the private sector, were recorded as being in progres in the 12 months to 28 February 1986.

Disabled Persons (Basildon)

26. Mr. Amess asked the Paymaster General how many disabled people are currently registered as unemployed in Basildon; and what encouragement his Department is giving to find them jobs.

Mr. Lang: On 4 April 1986, there were 269 unemployed disabled persons registered at Basildon jobcentre. Disabled jobseekers are encouraged to make full use of the services available to all jobseekers at jobcentres. In addition, a wide range of special help—including guidance from a specialist disablement resettlement officer — is available to assist with the particular problems which disabled people may face in getting and keeping employment.

Disabled people will, from July 1986, also be helped under the restart programme through which all those who have been unemployed for a year or more will be invited to an interview at a jobcentre and offered positive help towards finding work.

Disablement advisory service teams provide employers with advice and guidance on progressive employment policies and practices in the recruitment, retention, training and promotion of disabled people, and remind them of their obligations under the quota scheme which places a duty on those with 20 or more workers to employ a 3 per cent. quota of registered disabled people.

A new leaflet, "Action for Jobs", which contains details of the help available through my Department to unemployed people, including those who are disabled, is freely available through jobcentres, unemployment benefit offices and main post offices.

Industrial Relations

27. Mr. Dixon asked the Paymaster General when he next intends to meet representatives of the Trades Union Congress to discuss the operation of industrial relations legislation.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have no plans at present to meet the Trades Union Congress to discuss industrial relations matters.

65. Mr. Evans asked the Paymaster General what further initiatives he is considering for legislation in the field of industrial relations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have no plans at present for further legislation, but we are keeping the situation under review. A major factor in deciding whether anything further needs to be done will be the behaviour of unions themselves.

Community Programme

28. Mr. Sheerman asked the Paymaster General how many extra community programme places would be needed to ensure that a place was available for every eligible unemployed person.

46. Mr. Lofthouse asked the Paymaster General what is the ratio of eligible unemployed to available places for the extra 25,000 community programme places announced in the Budget.

Mr. Lang: The community programme is just one of a range of options available to long-term unemployed people. We are expanding the programme to 255,000 places by November which in a full year will provide opportunities for up to 330,000 participants. There are about 1·5 million unemployed people in the eligible group.

31. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the future of the training element of the community programme.

Mr. Lang: The aim of the community programme is to provide temporary employment. But training can be provided for workers both by agents and sponsors as part of their projects. And as part of the wider opportunities training programme. We shall continue to encourage sponsors to provide training on their projects and aim to provide broadly the same amount of training nationally under the wider opportunities training programme in 1986-87 as in the previous year.

49. Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Paymaster General how many community programme places are currently unfilled.

Mr. Lang: On 7 February 1986, the latest available date, the number of unfilled community programme vacancies nationally was 24,258.

The total number of community programme vacancies notified to jobcentres from April 1985 to February 1986 was 224,300. During the same period, 195,700 community programme vacancies were filled by jobcentres.

Youth Training Scheme

29. Mr. Faulds asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the premium place arrangements for the two-year YTS.

Mr. Trippier: Under two-year YTS, premium funding of £110 per month for each filled place will be paid in addition to the basic funding of £160 per filled place where appropriate. During 1986-87, around 51,000 first and one-year places and 13,000 continuation places, for those starting a second-year programme, will be payable. The Government are confident that this and the other measures contained in the new YTS will ensure that there is an adequate supply of high quality training places to provide for all eligible trainees.

53. Mr. O'Brien asked the Paymaster General what recent representations he has received on the future of mode B YTS provision.

Mr. Trippier: Most mode B providers will have contracts for premium places, or premium mixed with basic places, in two-year YTS; some will have additional funding for the disabled.

There have already been wide consultations over transitional funding, and the Manpower Services Commission has recently announced a further review of transitional funding to be undertaken by a sub-group of the Youth Training Board this autumn. The review will offer an opportunity for public representations.

80. Mr. Rogers asked the Paymaster General if he will estimate how many young people have left YTS since it began without going into a job or full-time education.

Mr. Trippier: This information is not available in the form requested. Since 1984 the Manpower Services Commission has conducted regular follow-up surveys of young people some three months after they leave YTS.

The table gives comparable information for 1984 and 1985:

	Leavers between 1 April to 31 October 1984 per cent.	Leavers between 1 April to 31 October 1985 per cent.
In a job or full-time education	62	62
On another YTS Scheme	5	6
Doing something else	2	7
Unemployed	31	26

All figures are rounded.

84. Mr. Janner asked the Paymaster General what steps are taken to seek to ensure that young people on YTS schemes receive proper training for jobs.

Mr. Trippier: Potential managing agents are required to set out in detail their proposals for training including the job skills that young people will receive. The formal contract with the managing agent refers to the agreements reached on these proposals. Thereafter, there are arrangements to monitor the acquisiton of skills and the quality of training provided. To strengthen these monitoring arrangements, the Government are introducing a new training standards advisory service, and is requiring all providers of training to apply to become approved training organisations. Only organisations who gain such status will be able to take part in YTS.

Employment Protection

30. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Paymaster General what he is planning to do to simplify the forms and leaflets produced by his Department particularly those concerning employment protection.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My Department is publishing a simple guide to employment legislation this afternoon, for use by advisers to small businesses. We are considering what can be done to simplify our publications.

Business Conferences

32. Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Paymaster General if he will estimate the relative position of the United Kingdom in the western European business conference market; and what steps he will take to improve our current standing.

Mr. Trippier: Detailed information on the business conference market in western Europe is not available. However, the Brussels-based Union of International Associations produces annual figures on international association conferences held throughout the world which indicate that in 1985 the United Kingdom hosted more events than any other western European country. More generally, the British Tourist Authority advises that, alongside France, the United Kingdom has ranked as the premier destination for business and conference tourism in western Europe over recent years.

In order to maintain our current position, many conference and exhibition facility developments and improvements are taking place, with five major centres due for completion this year. The BTA recognises the importance of the business and conference sector both in terms of higher spending yield and as a means of achieving its objective of encouraging off-peak traffic. It will be allocating additional resources to the sector in 1986-87.

Venture Capital

33. Mr. Fallon asked the Paymaster General whether he will take steps to seek to increase the activity of venture capital companies outside the south-east of England.

Mr. Trippier: There is a wide range of investment opportunities throughout the United Kingdom. Some venture capital companies are represented outside the south-east and investors in industry have offices throughout the country. In recent years there have been valuable initiatives to provide venture capital to small companies on a regional basis, including the establishment of local business expansion scheme funds. Figures published in the recent report by Peat Marwick Mitchell showed that the regional distribution of investment under the business expansion scheme was broadly in line with economic activity as shown by VAT registrations. I am, however, keen to encourage the further development of venture capital facilities in all areas.

Small Businesses

35. Mr. Rowe asked the Paymaster General what steps he will take to improve the marketing skills of the small business sector.

Mr. Trippier: At present, advice on marketing is available to the small business sector as part of the general business advice offered by the Department's small firms service. In addition the Department of Trade and Industry provides help with marketing and market research to small businesses in areas affected by closure in the steel, shipbuilding, textile and fisheries industries through its business improvement services package, whilst the British Overseas Trade Board provides a range of assistance which can help the small exporter with marketing overseas.

The Department of Trade and Industry announced on 11 April a "Support for Marketing" scheme which will start in the autumn. Under the scheme, the cost of the first two days' consultancy will be met, as well as 75 per cent. of the cost of up to 13 days' further consultancy. I welcome this initiative, as I believe it is important to improve the marketing skills of the small business sector.

37. Mr. Beaumont-Dark asked the Paymaster General if he will take steps to ensure that very small businesses obtain access to funding through the business expansion scheme.

Mr. Trippier: The business expansion scheme is an important initiative to promote the flow of equity finance to unquoted companies. Inland Revenue statistics show that more than half the companies raising money under the terms of the scheme in 1983-84 obtained investments of £50,000 or less and about half of the companies employed fewer than 10 people. Some local enterprise agencies have established local funds and other measures to bring together potential investors and small companies and I hope that others will also do this. In September 1985, my Department also published a new leaflet designed to increase awareness of the benefits the business expansion scheme can offer to both potential investors and small companies.

40. Mr. Lord asked the Paymaster General what recent representations he has received on the situation confronting small businesses faced with large customers delaying the payment of invoices for up to five months.

Mr. Trippier: We continue to receive representations on this issue from small firms and small firms organisations. These representations confirm the adverse effects of delays in payment on the financial position of small businesses particularly.

We shall publish guidance shortly on good practice in the payment of bills.

44. Mr. Sackville asked the Paymaster General, what plans he has to provide help for small firms with presentation of business plans for consideration by banks.

Mr. Trippier: Advice on the preparation of detailed business plans is available from a number of sources. Professional advisers can help the small business man with the presentation of a case to financial institutions, and bank managers can advise on the information they require when considering applications for loan finance for small firms. Local enterprise agencies and small firms centres can also assist the preparation of business plans and explain the importance of planning, budgeting and control as aspects of the management of successful small firms. These services will continue to be available.

Business Counsellors (Small Firms Service)

36. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend asked the Paymaster General if he will give the number of business counsellors working with the small firms service for each year since 1979.

Mr. Trippier: During the course of a year, the numbers fluctuate slightly. However, on 31 March of each year, the number of counsellors in England under contract to the Secretary of State was:

	Numbers
1979	110
1980	124
1981	127
1982	148
1983	173
1984	262
1985	250
1986	300

In Scotland and Wales, business counselling is provided by the Scottish and Welsh Development Agencies.

Loan Guarantee Scheme

38. Mr. Leigh asked the Paymaster General what proportion of companies applying under the small firms loan guarantee scheme for support are successful.

Mr. Trippier: Since the inception of the loan guarantee scheme in 1981, 68 applications, 0·4 per cent. of the total have been rejected by my Department on technical grounds. The Department does not assess the commercial viability of proposals, which is a matter for participating lenders. The Department has no record of loan applications declined by participating lenders which do not result in an application for a guarantee.

42. Mr. Chope asked the Paymaster General if he will take steps actively to promote the new small firms loan guarantee scheme.

Mr. Trippier: Many small business men will no doubt become aware from the banks of the more attractive terms now applying to the loan guarantee scheme. Information on the scheme forms part of a recently launched "Action for Jobs" promotion. I am considering what further promotion of the scheme is required.

86. Mr. Franks asked the Paymaster General how many firms have so far received assistance under the loan guarantee scheme.

Mr. Trippier: At 31 March 1986, a total of 16,642 guaranteed loans had been issued under the scheme to approximately 16,000 firms. Firms are permitted to receive more than one guaranteed loan, up to a maximum of £75,000.

Work Permits

43. Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Paymaster General if he has any plans to alter the requirements upon companies obtaining work permits for the employment of foreign nationals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I am satisfied that the present requirements adequately protect job opportunities for resident labour and ensure that overseas nationals are admitted for employment only when their presence here is essential.

Business Starts

45. Mr. Ashby asked the Paymaster General what is the latest figure for firms setting up in business in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trippier: Using the number of new registrations for VAT, it is estimated that there were 177,000 new business starts in the United Kingdom in 1984. Over the period 1980-84, there were some 830,000 new business starts in the United Kingdom. Full details were published in an article in British Business on 23 August 1985, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

City Action

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Paymaster General what evidence he has that his Department's city action teams and inner-city initiatives are improving the lot of small businesses.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The city action teams have been active in promoting enterprise and business initiatives in their areas and there are several encouraging signs of progress. The inner cities initiative has only been operating for just over a month and it is too early for results. But the encouragement of small business will be high on their agenda.

Tourist Information Centres.

48. Mr. Burt asked the Paymaster General what he is doing to increase the number of tourist information centres.

Mr. Trippier: As a result of the increase in its grant-in-aid, the English Tourist Board has been able to allocate additional resources in 1986-87 to the improvement and extension of tourist information centre facilities, including at points of entry.

New Technologies

50. Mr. Fatchett asked the Paymaster General to what extent new job creation measures announced recently by his Department will involve training in new technologies.

Mr. Trippier: It is not possible to assess the extent to which the measures to encourage enterprise and employment announced in the Budget will lead to jobs involving training in new technologies.

66. Mr. Weetch asked the Paymaster General when he next intends meeting representatives of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss employment prospects in the new technologies.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Ministers in this Department meet CBI representatives frequently to discuss matters of mutual interest. We have no plans at present to convene a meeting specifically on this subject.

English Tourist Board

52. Mr. Forth asked the Paymaster General what steps he will take to improve the value for money obtained from grant-in-aid to the English tourist board.

Mr. Trippier: I have already asked the board to make proposals in the course of this year for the introduction of performance measures and value for money criteria, in line with the principles of the financial management initiative. Ways of improving value for money will also be among the aspects covered by a financial management survey shortly to be undertaken jointly by my Department, the ETB and the British Tourist Authority, under the general arrangements for periodic reviews of the activities and performance of non-departmental public bodies.

Benefit Offices (Computers)

54. Mr. Wainwright asked the Paymaster General what proportion of unemployment benefit offices are now fully equipped with individual staff video screens and up-to-date computers; and by what date he expects all offices to be so equipped.

Mr. Lang: As at 11 April 1986, the new equipment is installed in 252 unemployment benefit offices; 159 of these offices are still undergoing training; 93 (representing 11 per cent. of the total) are providing the full service to the public. About 10 additional offices come into the programme each week. All offices should be fully equipped by the end of September 1987, and fully operational by December 1987.

Trade Union Act 1984

55. Mr. Ottaway asked the Paymaster General what information he has as to how many unions have now amended their constitutions in order to comply with the terms of the Trade Union Act 1984.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Most of the requirements of the 1984 Trade Union Act apply whether or not union constitutions have been amended to take them into account. Most rule books are silent on the question of ballots before strikes and neither prevent nor require them. Press reports indicate, however, that at least 38 unions have conducted ballots believed to comply with the Act.

In practice, constitutional changes are most likely to be adopted to give effect to the new requirements for the election of members of their executives. Twenty-one unions are reportedly to make permanent changes and a further four to comply by issuing temporary regulations. For some unions no change of policy is required.

Trade unions wishing to retain political funds must conduct review ballots under rules expressly approved for that purpose by the Certification Officer. Thirty-eight trade unions have now had such rules approved.

Rest Homes

56. Mr. Patrick McNair-Wilson asked the Paymaster General whether he has made any estimate of the number of hotel and guest house bed spaces which will be lost to rest home accommodation as a result of the proposed changes in the use classes order.

Mr. Trippier: These effects have not been estimated, but my right hon. Friend. The Secretary of State for the Environment has received comments on this aspect of the use classes order from representatives of the hotel and guest house industry. I know that my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for the Environment, will be taking careful account of these and other representations when considering his response to the Property Advisory group's proposals.

Restart Scheme

57. Mr. Stern asked the Paymaster General what national and local publicity campaigns are planned for the restart scheme, other than publicity through jobcentres.

Mr. Lang: The Manpower Services Commission is currently developing plans for national and local publicity about the restart scheme This will be carried forward in a variety of ways, including newspaper and media coverage.

Trade Union Ballots

59. Mr. William Powell asked the Paymaster General how many unions have received funds for trade union ballots.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am informed by the Certification Officer that 29 trade unions have received public money towards the costs of ballots under the provisions of section 1 of the Employment Act 1980.

Long-Term Unemployed (MSC Places)

63. Mr. Galley asked the Paymaster General if he has any plans to guarantee places for the long-term unemployed on a Manpower Services Commission scheme after a specified period of unemployment.

Mr. Lang: Our response to the recent report of the Employment Committee has made it clear why we regard its proposal to provide a guarantee for the long-term unemployed as neither practicable nor cost-effective compared with our own approach to the problem of long-term unemployment. In July this year, we are launching the nationwide restart programme under which every person who has been unemployed for 12 months or more will be invited to come for an interview at a jobcentre, which will provide him or her with individual help and advice, leading in as many cases as possible to submission to a job. A place on the community programme, a training course, entry to the enterprise allowance scheme or membership of a job club.

County Hall (Tourist Centre)

64. Mr. Whitfield asked the Paymaster General if he has given consideration to the Greater London council building, county hall, being used as the national tourist centre.

Mr. Trippier: The British Tourist Authority, in partnership with British Rail and other private sector interests, are opening a new British travel centre in Lower Regent street on 1 May. This centre is intended to play a key role in encouraging overseas visitors to travel to all parts of the country. It will enable them to obtain information and purchase all the services they require under one roof. In view of this development, I have not given consideration to the use of county hall for this purpose.

I can assure my hon. Friend that a number of potential purchasers have already expressed an interest in county hall, with a variety of uses in mind. The London Residuary Body is now working at all the options open, with a view to securing the best deal for London's ratepayers.

United Kingdom Advertising Expenditure

67. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Paymaster General what has been the level, at constant prices, of United Kingdom advertising expenditure around the world intended to increase incoming visitors each year since 1979.

Mr. Trippier: Advertising aimed at increasing tourism to the United Kingdom is carried out by a wide variety of organisations including the tourist boards, trade associations, local authorities, carriers and individual providers of tourist services. Information relating to the expenditure on such advertising is not available.

Pay Settlements

69. Mr. Cunliffe asked the Paymaster General what was the average pay settlement in 1985 for workers earning over £200 a week.

70. Mr. Clelland asked the Paymaster General what was the average pay settlement in 1985 for workers earning less than £100 a week.

Mr. Lang: Comprehensive information relating to average pay settlements for all workers at particular levels of earnings is not available. Details on changes in minimum pay rates determined by particular national collective agreements and wages orders affecting manual workers are published in the Department of Employment loose-leaf volume, "Time Rates of Wages and Hours of Work", a copy of which is available in the Library. Details on changes in average earnings between April 1984 and April 1985 for selected occupational and collective bargaining groups are given in part A of the report, "New Earnings Survey 1985", a copy of which is also in the Library.

Health and Safety Executive

71. Mr. Eastham asked the Paymaster General how many inspectors are presently employed by the Health and Safety Executive; and how many of these are on site inspectors in area offices.

Mr. Trippier: On 1 April 1986, the Health and Safety Executive employed 1,231 inspectors; 850 of these are engaged in inspection activity in the field. There were also 99 inspectors in the nuclear installations inspectorate based at HSE's London and Bootle headquarters, many of whom visit field sites regularly.

74. Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General how many inspectors are presently employed by the Health and Safety Executive; and how this figure compares with that for April 1980.

Mr. Trippier: On 1 April 1986 the Health and Safety Executive employed 1,231 inspectors. On 1 April 1980 it employed 1,444.

77. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Paymaster General how many staff are presently employed by the Health and Safety Executive; and how this compares with the figure for April 1980.

Mr. Trippier: On 1 April 1986, the Health and Safety Executive employed 3,585 permanent staff. On 1 April 1980, it employed 4,110.

Deregulation

73. Mr. Park asked the Paymaster General if he will estimate how many jobs have been created as a result of Government policies of deregulation.

Mr. Trippier: The White Paper "Lifting the Burden" (Cmnd. 9571) indicated that it is not possible to prove a direct causal relationship between deregulation and job creation, and no reliable estimate can therefore be given of the effect on jobs of progress to date. The available evidence suggests, however, that there is a link between deregulation and jobs through stimulating economic activity.

We will be publishing a second White Paper within the next few months, with further proposals for removing outdated and unnecessary regulations. The White Paper will also show what steps have been taken to ensure that, in framing new regulations, account is taken of their implications for business and for employment.

Travel-to-work Areas

75. Mr. Beith asked the Paymaster General whether he has commissioned any recent studies of the basis for determining travel-to-work areas.

Mr. Lang: The travel-to-work areas, and the methods used to determine them, were reviewed in 1984. The Department has not commissioned any more recent studies of the basis for determining travel-to-work areas. The areas are next scheduled for review in the early 1990s, when the results of the 1991 census of population become available.

Tourism (Dispersal of Visitors)

76. Mr. Bevan asked the Paymaster General which areas of the United Kingdom he has particularly in mind when seeking, as part of tourism policy, to encourage the dispersal of foreign visitors away from London.

Mr. Trippier: I have asked the British Tourist Authority and the English tourist board to pay particular attention to areas of the country which could attract more tourists and where unemployment is high.

The BTA will be receiving almost £3·5 million of additional funding in 1986-87 and will be devoting the majority of this to campaigns concentrating on regions with above-average unemployment. Around 20 per cent. will go to Scotland, and 15 per cent. to Wales. In England, the North of England and the west country will each receive about 20 per cent., and the heart of England 15 per cent. The remaining 10 per cent. will go to more specific problem areas such as the Isle of Wight and Thanet.

With its additional funding (£1·5 million for grant in aid activities and £1·5 million for the section 4 scheme) the ETB will be devoting additional resources to their tourism development action programmes which are planned for Bradford, Tyneside, Kielder, Birmingham and Exmoor. A major North of England promotion is to be mounted and other areas to receive special attention will include Cumbria, Merseyside and Stoke, which is of course building up to next month's opening of the 1986 National Garden Festival. The resorts will also benefit, in particular Bridlington and Torbay, the joint winners of the board's "Resorts 2000" competition.

Incomes

78. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Paymaster General what proportion of the populatiom eligible for employment presently have an income below £100 a week.

Mr. Lang: Precise recent information is not available. However, according to the Family Expenditure Survey for 1984, excluding those aged under 16, the retired and those not seeking employment, about 46 per cent. of the persons surveyed had a gross weekly income of less than £100.

Gross income in this context did not include housing benefits or rate rebates. Also, the percentage covers persons seeking or in part-time employment.

Conference Market

81. Mr. Gregory asked the Paymaster General what has been the estimated value of the conference market in England for each year since 1980.

Mr. Trippier: The English Tourist Board has made broad estimates of the overall value of conference business in the United Kingdom as a whole for each year since 1981. The board's figures are as follows:

1981	500
1982	600
1983	650
1984	740

Estimates for 1985 are still in preparation. There are no separate figures available for the value of conference business in England.

London Visitor and Convention Bureau

82. Mr. Porter asked the Paymaster General whether he proposes to provide financial support to the London visitor and convention bureau, following the abolition of the Greater London Council.

Mr. Trippier: The Government already provide financial support to the London visitor and convention bureau through the English tourist board, and this support will continue.

Wages (Payment)

87. Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General what information he has as to the proportion of workers who were paid in cash in 1976 and at the latest available date.

Mr. Trippier: Fifty-nine per cent. of workers were paid in cash in 1976 compared with 39 per cent. in 1984, which is the latest date for which figures are available.

Factory Inspectors

Mr. Skinner asked the Paymaster General how many factory inspectors were employed by the Health and Safety Executive in 1979; and what is the number at the latest available date.

Mr. Trippier: On 1 April 1979, there were 951 factory and specialist inspectors employed by the Health and Safety Executive. On 1 April 1986, there were 825.

Mr. Skinner asked the Paymaster General whether he will now increase the number of factory inspectors employed by the Health and Safety Executive by 50 per cent. from the 1975 level; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Decisions on the number of inspectors employed by the Health and Safety Executive are a matter for the executive, subject to the limits set by the Government on its total salary expenditure and manpower.

Machinery Accidents

Mr. Skinner asked the Paymaster General what was the number of injuries from power presses per year from 1956 until the introduction of the Power Presses Regulations 1965; and how many injuries occurred in 1979 and 1983.

Mr. Trippier: Information is not available in the form requested and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

The available information is listed below for power presses as defined in the Power Presses Regulations 1965, which include mechanical presses with a flywheel and clutch and and mechanical press brakes:

Year	Number of accidents reported
1956	235
1962	299
1963	350
1964	498
1965	441
1979	48
1983	27

Skilled Manpower

Mr. Thurnham asked the Paymaster General what representations he has received about shortages of skilled manpower in (a) manufacturing industry and (b) the chemical industry in particular; what action he is taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I have not received any direct representations about the shortages of skilled manpower in the manufacturing and chemical industries.

Current information on skill shortages indicates that overall, there is no shortfall of skilled workers although there are shortages of workers with particular skills, especially those associated with the application of new technology. In the chemical industry in particular a recent survey conducted by the Confederation of British Industry and the Manpower Services Commission reported that only 2 per cent. of respondents expected that skill shortages would limit output over the next four months.

However, the Government are very concerned that, in the long-term, shortages of skills do not become a barrier to increased output and to individuals' work opportunities, so that positive action is being taken to help alleviate them. A number of the Manpower Services Commission's adult training schemes are designed to address immediate skill needs by focusing directly on the needs of local employers, as well as action to increase the supply of skills in the longer term through two-year YTS, the non-advanced further education initiative and other adult training policies. Nevertheless, the Government remain convinced that training to meet skill needs is primarily the responsibility of industry itself and consistently urge employers to see that training is an investment rather than an overhead.

Small Firms (Payment of Bills)

Mr. Heddle asked the Paymaster General when he intends to publish practical guidance notes on the late payment of bills to small firms.

Mr. Trippier: A guidance booklet on payment of bills will be published on 20 May. It will give practical advice to purchasers and suppliers designed to ensure that bills are paid on time.

ENERGY

Sellafield (Incident)

Mr. Cook asked the Secretary of State for Energy which of the recommendations of the Health and Safety Executive contained in its report entitled "The Contamination of the Beach Incident at British Nuclear Fuels plc, Sellafield, November 1983" published in February 1984, have been implemented fully by British Nuclear Fuels plc.

Mr. Goodlad: I am advised by the Health and Safety Executive that the recommendations in its report on the 1983 beach incident were that British Nuclear Fuels should revise operating instructions and carry out examinations, investigations and reviews as soon as practicable; and that this was done by BNF, which submitted findings to NII.

Resulting from this, the need was identified for improved administrative arrangements and engineering modifications to be carried out by BNF. Some of these had to be carried out before the reprocessing plant was permitted to restart; others were to be implemented on a longer time-scale.

Most of the latter requirements have been completed. Some work, including part of the refurbishing of the B211 complex, is still in progress. In addition, a third sea tank is under construction.

Energy Audits

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Energy if, when he next meets the chairman of the British Gas Corporation, he will raise with him the possibility of the corporation introducing free energy audits, coupled with interest-free loans for the installation of energy-saving measures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Since 1983, the British Gas Corporation has offered free basic home energy audits, on an experimental basis, in its south-eastern region; the public response has been minimal. My right hon. Friend welcomes the support which the corporation is giving to Energy Efficiency year, but has no plans to raise with the chairman the provision of interest-free loans to consumers.

British Business (United States Laws)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he is prepared to recommend to private sector companies in the energy industry that they should adopt a policy similar to his own when faced with computer suppliers in the United Kingdom insisting on extraterritorial restraints; and if he will support such actions.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: This is a matter for the industry, which will, however, no doubt take account of the Government's policy on extraterritoriality as confirmed in the answer which my right hon. Friend gave to the hon. Member on 27 March 1986 at columns 556-7.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is his policy on the acquisition for the use of his Department of computers and equipment supplied by companies which seek to impose extraterritorial United States controls on their United Kingdom staff or on non-Government United Kingdom customers or on United Kingdom exports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: My Department makes its purchases of computers and related equipment on the basis of value for money and related considerations. The Department's position on extraterritorial constraints is as described in the answer which my right hon. Friend gave the hon. Member on 27 March 1986 at columns 556-7.

Nuclear Industry (Computers)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the policy of the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency towards the supply of detailed information on the United Kingdom nuclear industry to United States computer subsidiaries, and towards recommending or causing United Kingdom nuclear installations to provide such information, as a precondition for the supply by United States subsidiaries of computers to the United Kingdom nuclear industry.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: Subject to the requirements of the Official Secrets Acts, this is a matter for the industry.

which will no doubt take account of the Government's policy on extraterritoriality, as confirmed in the answer which my right hon. Friend gave to the hon. Member on 27 March 1986 at columns 556-7.

Oil Exports

Mr. William Shelton asked the Secretary of State for Energy how Her Majesty's Government's policy on the distribution of North sea oil exports is communicated to oil exporting companies; what are the criteria by which established patterns of trade are determined for the purposes of this policy; and which non-European Economic Community or International Energy Agency countries are included within these patterns.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I, and also my officials, are frequently in touch on matters of mutual interest with the companies active in the North sea. On the other two parts of the question, I have nothing to add to my reply of 8 December 1983 to my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor) at column 222.

Power Stations

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will list the number, type of output and location of those power stations which will be in need of replacement in the next 20 years;

(2) if he will list the annual amount of coal burn at each of the power stations scheduled for closure during the next 20 years.

Mr. Goodlad: Decisions on closures of power stations in England and Wales are the responsibility of the Central Electricity Generating Board. For planning purposes, the board assigns a notional operating lifetime of 40 years to its fossil-fired power stations and of 30 years to its Magnox nuclear power stations. Because of the relatively low level of generating plant commissioned in recent years, a high proportion of plant of all types now in operation will complete its full notional lifetime during the next 20 years. Decisions on closures are not taken until the year before and are made in the light of various factors including electricity demand, the relative costs of primary fuels and the availability of more economic generating capacity elsewhere on the board's system.

The board has identified the following stations for decommissioning in October 1986:

Plant	Capacity MWso	Type of firing	Close (C) or Reserve (R)
Westwood*	60	Coal	C
Belvedere HP	230	Oil	R
Belvedere LP*	115	Oil	C

* Final part.

Offshore Production Licensing

Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has any proposals for further off-shore production licensing.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: My proposals for a tenth round of offshore licensing are as follows.

The round will offer a mix of blocks spread across various areas of the United Kingdom continental shelf and all awards will be made at the discretion of the Secretary of State for Energy. The aim will be to consolidate on the ninth round and provide further opportunities for exploration, particularly in areas which have seen relatively little licensing in recent years. There are many such areas, including some on the fringes of existing mature areas which would benefit from more intensive examination.

My intention would be to license blocks in the following broad areas:

Area	Quadrants
Northern North Sea	210, 211, 3, 8, 9
Inner and Outer Moray Firth	11, 12, 13, 14, 17, 18, 19
Central North Sea	15, 16, 20, 21, 22, 23
Mid North Sea High	36, 37, 38, 39
Southern North Sea	41, 42, 43, 44, 47
Rockall Trough	165, 166
Faeroes Trough/North and West of Shetlands	206, 207, 208, 209, 214
North of 62 deg. N.	219

The quadrants are given as a guide only; not all the available blocks will be put on offer.

The terms will probably follow the same general lines as in the ninth round, although I am considering some adjustment of rental payments.

In the coming weeks, I shall be discussing my proposals with those involved, with particular reference to areas where special care and attention may be needed in the conduct of exploration and development for environmental, fishing or other reasons. The timing of the formal invitation to apply will be determined in the light of the outcome of these consultations.

SCOTLAND

Greater Glasgow Health Board

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many letters or cards he has received concerning cuts in the Greater Glasgow health board's services; and if he will provide extra money to the board.

Mr. John MacKay: Over 7,000 representations have been received, nearly all of which are on preprinted postcards which were, I understand, provided by the health board's trade union committee.

There have been no cuts in Greater Glasgow's financial allocation. Indeed, Greater Glasgow is now the best-funded health board in Scotland, both per head of population and in terms of demand for health care. Any extra funding could only be provided at the expense of other less well-funded boards; it is therefore for the board to provide its services within its existing allocation.

Hamilton College

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what criteria were used to assess Hamilton college private school in granting it approval by his Department.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Before the proprietor of an independent school is given notice of final registration of that school under the provisions of the Education (Scotland) Act 1980, my right hon. and learned Friend requires to be satisfied that—

(a) efficient and suitable instruction is being provided at the school, having regard to the ages and sex of the pupils attending;

(b) the school premises are suitable for a school;

(c) the accommodation provided at the school premises is adequate and suitable having regard to the number, ages and sex of the pupils attending; and

(d) the proprietor of the school and any teacher employed at the school is a proper person to be the proprietor of an independent school or to be a teacher in any school.

Higher Education

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give figures showing the proportion of 17-year-olds in Scotland who entered higher education in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Information of the kind requested is normally presented in the form of an age participation index, showing the number of entrants aged under 21 to higher education in any particular year expressed as a percentage of the 17-year-old population in the preceding year. The age participation indices for the years requested are given below.

	Age participation index
1976-77	16·8
1977-78	17·0
1978-79	17·0
1979-80	16·8
1980-81	18·0
1981-82	18·1
1982-83	18·0
1983-84	18·7
1984-85	19·3

Acid Rain (Galloway)

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the effect of acid rain on the quality of fresh water in Galloway; and what plans he has to alleviate the problem.

Mr. Ancram: The acid waters review group of the Department of the Environment, on which the Scottish Office is represented, has been reviewing the available data on the biological and chemical status of United Kingdom freshwaters. The group's interim report, which is due to be published shortly, included the current data on the effects in Galloway. I understand that the group's final report, which is expected by early 1988, will aim to assess the probable causes of freshwater acidification and the possibilities for remedial measures.

Criminal Offences

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his reply of Thursday 17 April, Official Report, column 462, if he will list in respect of each police force area in Scotland in 1978 the total number of (a) offences notified to the police, (b) offences of violence against the person, (c) burglaries, (d) thefts, (e) offences of fraud and forgery, and (f) offences of criminal damage.

Mr. John MacKay: The table sets out the requested figures on crimes recorded by the police, using the best available approximations in the Scottish crime classification to the categories listed in the question.

Crimes Recorded by Police Force Area, Scotland 1978

Crime	Central	Dumfries and Galloway	Fife	Grampian	Lothian and Borders	Northern	Strathclyde	Tayside	Scotland Total
Total Crimes	13,461	5,167	11,903	21,904	58,748	8,126	192,348	23,330	334,957
Violence against the person	273	253	258	525	756	252	4,563	586	7,466
Burglary	2,711	810	2,193	3,264	11,712	1,037	49,811	4,072	75,710
Theft	6,594	2,544	6,098	11,603	33,740	4,100	93,878	12,066	170,623
Fraud and forgery	501	337	646	1,067	3,976	541	5,542	968	13,578
Criminal damage	2,745	1,021	1,998	4,038	6,610	1,453	28,825	4,297	50,987

Notes:

The categories listed above have been derived from the categories of the Scottish crime classification as follows:

"Violence against the person": all non-sexual crimes of violence (group 1 of the standard classification) apart from robbery, those crimes of indecency (group 2) which contain a violent element, and certain crimes involving malicious and reckless conduct.

"Burglary": housebreaking.

"Theft": opening lockfast places and clandestine removal in addition to theft per se.

"Fraud and forgery": fraud, forgery and uttering, bankruptcy and currency offences.

"Criminal damage": fire-raising, vandalism and other crimes of malicious and reckless conduct not involving violence against the person.

PRIME MINISTER

EC (Surplus Food Disposal)

Q105. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the policy of providing European Economic Community subsidies for the export of cheap food to East Europe and Libya; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The European Council has agreed a budgetary guideline for agriculture and the Community is now working to apply measures in the common agricultural policy which bring supply and demand into better balance so that the need for sales of surplus food can in future be reduced.

Ministry of Defence (MSC Programmes)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Prime Minister what contact has been made by the Manpower Services Commission with the Ministry of Defence within the last six months concerning job creation and community programme arrangements; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: In September last year the Ministry of Defence provided the Manpower Services

Commission with suggestions for work on the defence estate which could be considered suitable for community programme projects. Negotiations between the Manpower Services Commission, Property Services Agency and Ministry of Defence over possible projects are in progress in a number of localities. Commission and Ministry of Defence officials are due to meet again on 1 May to explore further opportunities which would provide jobs under the community programme.

Engagements

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 22 April.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 22 April.

Mr. Flannery asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 22 April.

Mr. Robert C. Brown asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 22 April.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. I was present at Windsor for the arrival of their Majesties the King and Queen of Spain. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I will be attending a state banquet in honour of their Majesties the King and Queen of Spain.

National Dock Labour Scheme

Mr. Parry asked the Prime Minister if the recent speech of the Secretary of State for Transport to the National Association of Port Employers, concerning changes to the national dock labour scheme, represents the policy of Her Majesty's Government; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend's speech did not propose changes to the national dock labour scheme, but I entirely share the views he expressed about the future.

Computers (Procurement Policy)

Mr. Gould asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the co-ordination between the Department of Trade and Industry and other Departments of Her Majesty's Government's procurement policy in so far as it has implications for the future growth of the United Kingdom computer industry.

The Prime Minister: Departments are responsible for their own purchasing decisions, but the Department of Trade and Industry offers guidance, within the framework of the public purchasing initiative, on the Government's procurement policy. This aims to ensure that Departments use the influence of their purchases to help develop the design, technology and competitiveness of their suppliers.

The United Kingdom computer industry has benefited from this policy and I am confident its growth will continue.

Dr. Kurt Waldheim

Mr. Freeson asked the Prime Minister if she will authorise the release of British papers relating to the wartime activity of Dr. Kurt Waldheim.

The Prime Minister: Records of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and its predecessor Departments relating to the years prior to 1956 are with very few exceptions available at the Public Records Office. Certain categories of documents have been withheld from public inspection. However, no papers withheld by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office contain any material on this matter which is not already public knowledge.

Terrorist Incidents

Mr. Kaufman asked the Prime Minister if she will list all terrorist incidents which have taken place in Great Britain since 4 May 1979 with, for each, the numbers of those killed and injured, together with details and cost of damage caused.

The Prime Minister: I will reply to the right hon. Gentleman shortly.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Dogs

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the numbers, type and function of dogs used by the British Transport police, the harbour police, and the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority police.

Mr. Giles Shaw: None, since my right hon. Friend has no responsibility, under the terms of the Police Act 1964, for the British Transport police, the various harbour police forces or for the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority police.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the number of police dogs nominated for the Police Dog Action of the Year Award for each of the last three years; and what the award was for in each case.

Mr. Giles Shaw: There were 24, 14 and 12 nominations in 1983, 1984 and 1985 respectively for the Police Dog Action of the Year Award.

In 1983, the award was won for persistence in conducting a search of a foreign ship which eventually resulted in the discovery, in a secret compartment, of 111 packets of cannabis having an estimated street value of £500,000.

In 1984 and 1985, the award was won by dogs which showed outstanding persistence and bravery in tackling violent criminals who were determined to avoid arrest. In each case, despite being attacked themselves, the dogs were able to play the major part in effecting the arrest of the suspects concerned.

Channel Islands

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his recent visit to Jersey, Guernsey, Sark and Alderney.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. Friend visited the islands of Jersey, Guernsey, Sark and Alderney during the period 1 to 4 April in his capacity as the Privy Councillor with special responsibility for these dependencies of the Crown. The main purpose of his visit was to see the islands and to meet informally the lieutenant governors and representatives of the island authorities, in order to acquaint himself with a range of matters of mutual interest and concern.

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library transcripts of his statements made in Jersey and Guernsey, respectively, regarding Her Majesty's Government's assessment of the constitutional relationship between the two bailiwicks and the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: No verbatim record was kept of the comments my right hon. Friend made during his recent visit to the Channel Islands. On a number of occassions he reaffirmed that Her Majesty's Government had no desire to change the long-standing constitutional relationship which exists between the Channel Islands and the United Kingdom.

News International Plant, Wapping

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report a list of the weapons taken from demonstrators at Wapping by the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The following items have been taken from demonstrators or recovered by the police in the course of the News International dispute at Wapping.

a rope harpoon
a number of live shotgun cartridges a rubber hose embedded with nails a number of beer glasses nails stones bricks
eggs
darts iron bars scaffolding clips iron railing tops bottles
a length of hard rubber marbles
a screwdriver a knife
a bottle of paraffin
a thunder-flash

Animal Experiments

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what conditions he plans to attach to applications for a project licence involving animals to develop or study the use, hazards or safety of tobacco and its substitutes; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what conditions he plans to attach to applications for a project licence involving animals to select, develop or study the use, hazards or safety of beauty preparations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Standard conditions for project licences are set out in annex D to the draft Home Office guidance note on the administration of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Bill, which is available to Members. Other licence conditions will be added wherever appropriate.

Featherstone Prison

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr, of 10 March, Official Report, columns 331-32, he will publish the relevant figures from the segregation unit occurrence book at Featherstone prison in respect of items (a) to (e) since May 1985, together with a comparison with a convenient period for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: My noble Friend will write to the hon. Member.

Torture

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department has taken towards issuing a unilateral declaration against torture in accordance with the United Nations Resolution 32/64 of 8 December 1977.

Mr. Mellor: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 20 February 1986, at column 302.

Gas and Chemical Explosions

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons have been killed due to (a) gas explosions and (b) chemical explosions since 1979.

Mr. Trippier: I have been asked to reply.

The information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The available information is as follows:

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Fatal Accidents Act 1982

Mr. Rhodes James asked the Attorney-General whether he proposes to seek to amend the Fatal Accidents Act 1982 to extend the definition of dependants to include parents or parent of a deceased person of any age.

The Attorney-General: The category of those for whose benefit damages for bereavement may be claimed under section 1A of the Fatal Accidents Act 1976, was fully considered both in this House and in another place during the passage of the Administration of Justice Act 1982. The Government have no present plans further to amend the law.

Family Law Reform

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Attorney-General if he plans to introduce a family law reform bill with particular reference to the law on illegitimacy in the next Session of Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: In its report No. 118 on illegitimacy, published in 1982, the Law Commission made a number of recommendations aimed at removing the legal disadvantages suffered by illegitimate children. These recommendations have been accepted by the Government and will be brought into effect at the earliest possible opportunity.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Food Exports (Spain)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he is satisfied with the discharge of his responsibilities in relation to the promotion of British food exports to Spain by the agricultural attaché at the office of the United Kingdom permanent representative to the European Community during the negotiations on Spanish accession.

Mr. Renton: Throughout the negotiations it was an important objective of the Government to secure the best possible access for British exporters of both industrial and agricultural goods to the Spanish and Portuguese markets. As my right hon. and learned Friend told the House during the Second Reading of the Spanish and Portuguese Accession Bill [Lords] on 4 December at column 316, the terms negotiated by the Government, to which the office of the United Kingdom permanent representative to the European Community made a valuable contribution, are very satisfactory.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Exports (United States Controls)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if there has been any contact, formal or informal, between his officials and employees or representatives, of (a) IBM, (b) Hewlett Packard, (c) the Sperry Corporation since January 1985 on the matter of United States export controls in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: My officials have from time to time had contact with representatives of IBM, Hewlett Packard and Sperry Corporation during this period. A number of subjects were discussed including United States re-export controls and Her Majesty's Government's objections to their extraterritorial nature.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he or his Department has had any contact with the Digital Equipment Corporation relating to United States export controls in the United Kingdom since January 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Officials from this Department have met representatives of DEC on various occasions since January 1985 and Her Majesty's Government's objections to United States re-export controls have been discussed.

HOTOL Concept (Studies)

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he envisages the initial studies of the horizontal take-off and landing proof of concept will be completed; and how the results will be processed.

Mr. Pattie: The proof of concept studies I announced in February are part of a 24 month effort to probe the key technical aspects of this innovatory spaceplane. The studies will also provide essential market and cost analyses.

The magnitude of the technological challenge involved, and the attraction of HOTOL's high-launch capability, make it a natural candidate for international partnership. Accordingly, another purpose of the studies will be to consider the possibilities of international co-operation in this project, which I intend to discuss with Ministers and other member states of the European Space Agency later this year.

EC (Imports and Exports)

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing United Kingdom imports and exports of manufactures from the first nine other members of the European Economic Community in each year from 1970 and in 1986 to date, together with the trade balance in crude and in balance of payments terms;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing United Kingdom imports and exports of manufactures from the other 11 countries which are now members of the European Economic Community each year from 1970 and in 1986 to date, together with the trade balance in crude and in balance of payments terms;

(3) if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing United Kingdom imports and exports of manufactures from the first nine other members of the European Economic Community each year from 1970 in terms of 1985 import and export values, respectively.

Mr. Alan Clark: Trade in manufactures with the European Community is only available at current prices. The information is in the tables.

Biological Washing Powders (Tests)

Dr. Glyn asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what tests are required by his Department for possible skin injury or damage before a new biological washing powder is placed on the market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Howard: None. The enzymes in biological washing powders may aggravate allergies in some cases, but are otherwise harmless. The suppliers warn users on the packet to protect their skin against washing powders. They have now agreed to label washing powders in order to show clearly whether or not they have biological action. This will enable allergy sufferers to avoid the biological product.

Steel (EC Aids)

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will identify those indirect state aids in the European Economic Community which are given to European Economic Community steel producers; and what steps he is taking to ensure that they are eliminated;

(2) if he will make a statement on the implications of the indirect state aid in the European Economic Community, identified in the report of the National Economic Development Office, for the British Steel Corporation and independent British steel producers.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I welcome the report prepared by Environmental Resources Ltd. for the National Economic Development Office on indirect aids to steel firms as an important contribution on this very difficult subject. As it makes clear, the identification, quantification and elimination of indirect aids is not straightforward, since the aid is provided to another industry or activity. Since the 25 July 1985 Council of Ministers, the United Kingdom has emphasised that the relative importance of indirect aids would increase after most direct aids were prohibited at the end of 1985. At the 29 October Council of Ministers, the Commission undertook to reinforce its monitoring of indirect aids which might have a distortive effect on competition in the steel industry. The United Kingdom fully supports the Commission's intention to minimise distortions to competition.

Trade Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for 1970 and 1985 United Kingdom imports from and exports to the European Economic Community and to the rest of the world of, respectively, textiles, clothing, footwear, motor cars, buses and coaches, heavy goods vehicles, plastics, ships, steel and domestic electrical appliances.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 21 April 1986, c. 11]: Information which is readily available and which can be provided within acceptable cost limits is as follows:

ENVIRONMENT

Local Enterprise Agencies

89. Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to improve links between the Council for Small Industries in Rural Areas and local enterprise agencies.

Mrs. Rumbold: I am satisfied that the close links already established between CoSIRA and the Local Enterprise Agencies which operate in rural areas work well, to the mutual benefit of both organisations and of the small business man in securing a complementary yet comprehensive advice service. I have no plans, therefore, to alter existing arrangements.

90. Mr. Bellingham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he plans to increase the funding of local enterprise agencies in rural areas.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Development Commission previously provided assistance towards the start-up costs of local enterprise agencies in rural areas. In the light of the Government's new five-year scheme administered by the Department of employment the commission is currently reviewing its assistance in this field and will issue revised guidelines in due course.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Corrie asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the proposed sites of special scientific interest, alleged by the Nature Conservancy Council in its paper, "Topical Issues," volume No. 2, of March 1986, to have been destroyed and damaged had been formally notified to the owners concerned.

Mrs. Rumbold: No Sir. As indicated in the paper referred to, these sites were proposed for notification as sites of special scientific interest. The Nature Conservancy Council is currently considering the formal notification of two of the sites concerned. The third is no longer considered as meeting the criteria for notification.

A1(M) Park Plaza Development

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why he decided to override the advice of the inspector relating to the proposed park plaza development over the A1(M).

Mr. Tracey: My right hon. Friend's reasons for granting outline planning permission for the Park Plaza development are given in his decision letter of 20 March, a copy of which was sent to my hon. Friend.

Municipal Incineration

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the results of the report of the Warren Spring laboratory on municipal incineration in December 1984.

Mrs. Rumbold: Assuming that the hon. Member is referring to the Warren Spring laboratory report entitled "The Incineration of Municipal Refuse" Ref. No. LR 498 (AP) M produced in late 1984, the report contains detailed data on emissions to atmosphere for eight incinerators, and I have arranged for a copy to be made available in the Commons Library.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment from which date the first year of the London Residuary Body will run for the purposes of its annual report.

Mr. Tracey: Residuary bodies have been asked to prepare their first annual reports for the part-year from their establishment to 31 March 1986, and to adopt the financial year thereafter. The London Residuary Body was established on 12 August 1985.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what matters will be included in the annual report of the London Residuary Body.

Mr. Tracey: Paragraph 10 of schedule 13 to the Local Government Act 1985 requires residuary bodies' annual reports to cover the discharge of their functions. I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave him on 21 April, which listed the main responsibilities of the London Residuary Body, indicated that residuary bodies' annual reports were under discussion, and gave an assurance that the aim would be for them to provide as full an account as necessary.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer of 15 April, Official Report, column 336, if he will provide the latest evidence on which he bases his estimate of savings of £50 million annually arising from the abolition of the Greater London Council; and what means he is employing to monitor costs and savings following abolition.

Mr. Tracey: The estimate of savings of £50 million was made in 1984 and its basis was set out then. Apart from the estimates of initial redundancies referred to in my previous answer, manpower in the new structure will be monitored, in part through returns from boroughs to be required under section 56 of the Local Government Act 1985. Expenditure and rates will also be monitored, but these will be affected by many factors apart from the abolition of the GLC.

EC (Environmental Assessment Directive)

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the implementation of the European Communities environmental assessment directive.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have today published, and placed in the Library, a consultation paper which sets out proposals for implementing the European directive on environmental assessment. They would apply to developments which are subject to planning procedures. The arrangements proposed will ensure that, for projects of major potential impact, comprehensive environmental data will be provided by the developer with the assistance of other bodies as necessary. Experience of the use of environmental assessment procedures has shown that they can help to resolve environmental problems at an early stage and avoid unnecessary delay and frustration when the planning application has been submitted.

The proposals are based on advice from a working party which included representatives of industry, local authorities and environmental groups. It was the unanimous view of the working party that the requirements of the directive could be met within the framework of the existing land use planning system. My right hon. and learned Friend, the Secretary of State for Scotland, and my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Wales, are publishing consultation papers making similar proposals for Scotland and Wales which are also being placed in the Library.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Archer asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many supplementary benefit recipients in Northern Ireland are recorded as caring for sick or disabled dependants.

Mr. Needham: I regret that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

SERPS (Statistics)

Mr. Archer asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the latest available figures on the numbers of men and women in Northern Ireland who are contracted out of the state earnings related pension scheme; and what proportion they form of the total number of employed men and women in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: The latest available figures are those for the tax year ended 5 April 1983 and are as follows:

	Contracted out	Percentage of total number employed
Men	146,165	49·60
Women	82,405	38·27

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will now specify the benefits obtained from the Anglo-Irish agreement in the campaign against terrorism.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 21 April 1986]: The Irish Government have signed the European convention on the suppression of terrorism. The Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and the Commissioner of the Garda Siochana are making good progress in their programme of work to improve security co-ordination, and my right hon. Friend expects a report soon.

TRANSPORT

Transport Act 1985 (Registered Services)

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate those services registered in England under the Transport Act 1985 in percentage terms as compared to the existing services (a) in route miles covered and (b) in level of service provision on those routes.

Mr. David Mitchell: It would be highly misleading to publish any such information since at this stage only commercially viable services have been registered by operators. Only when these have added to them, the services to be provided under contract to local authorities and to passenger transport executives for which substantial amounts of money are available, will it be possible to make sensible comparisons. An analysis of this nature will be made by the Transport and Road Research Laboratory as soon as practicable.

Motorway Construction

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Transport how much has been spent in constant terms on new motorway construction in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested is as follows. The first column shows constant prices in relation to general inflation and, for the second the expenditure has been revalued to reflect changes in the costs of road construction.

Volvo 300

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many road traffic accidents involving Volvo 300 series automatics have been recorded by his Department.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The road traffic accident statistics requested are not available. During the last three years the Department's vehicle inspectorate has received details of 185 incidents involving Volvo 300 series automatics.

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusions his Department has reached following its investigation of traffic accidents involving Volvo 300 automatic cars; and what changes in training manuals of servicing procedures have been suggested to the company.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The vehicle inspectorate has concluded that if the gear selector lever is inadvertently located between the designated gear engagement positions, the vehicle could move away in reverse if the throttle is depressed. An engineering solution has been developed by the manufacturer and evaluated by the inspectorate. The manufacturer will institute a recall during May of this year to fit this equipment to Volvo 300 automatics manufactured after 1978. The manufacturer has highlighted the correct driving procedures and produced a new supplementary handbook for issue as part of the recall action.

British Transport Police

Dr. Hampson asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many British transport police are stationed at King's Cross, Leeds, Sheffield and York railway stations.

Mr. David Mitchell: The deployment of British Transport police officers is a matter for the chief constable of the force; my Department does not have detailed information of this kind.

National Dock Labour Scheme

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department has had any discussions with the port employers concerning the proposed changes to the national dock labour scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: No, I have at present no such proposals to discuss.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Mental Patients

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will institute an inquiry into the dispersal of former mental hospital patients from London to seaside towns.

Mr. Whitney: We have no plans to institute such an inquiry. We are aware that some local authorities in the south-east have expressed concern at the numbers of former patients being discharged from distant mental illness and mental handicap hospitals into their areas, but we have had no direct representations from those authorities; nor have we had any indication of the numbers of people involved or of their current degree of dependency. If we receive evidence suggesting that a particular hospital is acting less than responsibly in the discharge of long-stay patients, we will look into the situation.

Contact Lenses

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, further to his answer of 10 December 1985, Official Report, column 609, whether any further information has come to his attention regarding corneal damage or destruction caused by soft contact lenses.

Mr. Hayhoe: The use of extended wear soft contact lenses is being monitored by the various means described in my reply to the hon. Member on 10 December 1985 at column 609. No new information of substance has been received since then but I understand that a study at Moorfields eye hospital will be reported shortly.

Benefits

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the annual cost of (a) raising the single retirement pension by £5 a week and the married couple's pension by £8 and (b) raising child benefit by £3 a week; and if he will give the cost in both gross and net terms, together with a detailed breakdown of the savings on supplementary benefit, housing benefit and family income supplement which would result from these increases.

Mr. Major: If the rates of retirement pension and child benefit due to come into force in July 1986 were futher increased by the amounts stated, and if no corresponding adjustment were made to supplementary benefit and to housing benefit needs allowances, the gross and net effects on expenditure in 1987-88 would be:—

Retirement pension

Gross increase—£2,260 million

Net increase— £1,650 million (after taking account of a reduction of £400 million in spending on supplementary pension and £200 million on housing benefit).

Child benefit

Gross increase—£1,900 million

Net increase—£1,450 million (after taking account of a reduction of £350 million in supplementary benefit, £50 million in housing benefit and £50 million on child dependency additions).

There would be no effect on expenditure on family income supplement.

British Business (United States Laws)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy on the acquisition for his Department's use of computers and equipment supplied by companies which seek to impose, in the United Kingdom, extraterritorial United States controls on their United Kingdom staff or on non-Government United Kingdom customers or United Kingdom exports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: I have nothing further to add to my reply to the hon. Member on 9 April at columns 118-119.

Committee on Safety of Medicinces

Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what new members of the Committee on Safety of Medicines have been appointed since 3 June 1985; and what interests they have declared and in relation to which pharmaceutical companies.

Mr. Hayhoe: No new members have been appointed to the committee since 3 June 1985. The current term of office of all members expires at the end of 1986. I intend to announce later this year the arrangements for putting on the public record information about relavant interests declared by members of the committee in the terms of office which start in 1987.

Hospital Waiting Lists (Computerisation)

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the present state of progress made by the West Midlands regional health authority on the pilot scheme for the use of computerised hospital waiting lists.

Mr. Whitney: The pilot study of a central collection and communication system for waiting times by the West Midlands regional health authority is under way. The project co-ordinator has been in post since 1985 setting up the system. Arrangements have been made to collect information about waiting times for general surgery from the hospitals in participating districts. The computer will convert this into a form that can be readily understood by the 100 selected general practitioners in districts with long waiting times. The first batch of information should be issued shortly and this will be followed by monthly supplements.

Association of Professional Ambulance Personnel

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those district health authorities which have recognised the Association of Professional Ambulance Personnel.

Mr. Whitney: The information is as follows:

Cornwall and the Isles of Scilly
Gloucester
Hull
Oxfordshire
Preston
Somerset
Swindon
West Berkshire and Medway (in those ambulance stations where the association has substantial membership).

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what advice he has given to district health authorities in connection with recognition of the Association of Professional Ambulance Personnel.

Mr. Whitney: Regional health authorities were informed on 21 January 1985 that it is the Government's view that staff ought to be able to be represented by organisations of their choice. Individual health authorities are free to recognise the association locally, and we have encouraged a number of district health authorities to grant recognition where the association has demonstrated significant local membership. We have also made it clear that we expect authorities, where the association has a membership of 10 per cent. or more of the relevant work force, to grant the facility whereby members' contributions to the association are deducted at source.

Health Centres

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many rural health centres were in operation in 1979 and at the latest available date.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that this information is not held centrally in the form requested. There were a total of 895 health centres in England at 1 October 1979, and 1,120 at 1 October 1984, the latest date for which figures are available.

Ante-natal Clinics

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many ante-natal clinics have been closed since 1979; and what information he has regarding the number of clinics closed down in rural areas since that date.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that this information is not available centrally.

Chiropodists

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many chiropodists were employed by the National Health Service in 1979 and at the latest available date.

Mr. Whitney: The information is as follows:

National Health Service Chiropodists at 30 September†

	Whole-time	Part-time	*Total whole-time equivalents
1979	1,220	3,330	1,930
1984‡	1,710	2,440	2,290

* All figures rounded to nearest 10.
† Figures are for England only.
‡ Latest available information

Rural Health Visits

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many mobile (a) chiropody units and (b) physiotherapy units are in operation in rural areas at the latest available date.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that this information is not collected centrally.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report all changes made in the restricted list for prescriptions since its inception.

Mr. Hayhoe: All changes to the products affected by the selected list scheme are contained in the following amending regulations: SI 1985 No. 540, SI 1985 No. 803, SI 1985 No. 1712 and SI 1986 No. 381.

Private Nursing Homes, Sheffield

Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many private nursing homes there are in the area of the Sheffield metropolitan district council; what information he has as to how often they are officially inspected; and if the general public have any means of access to the inspectors' reports.

Mr. Whitney: At 31 December 1984, the latest date for which information is available centrally, there were eight private nursing homes registered with Sheffield health authority, all of which have to be inspected at least twice a year and some of which may be the subject of reports to the authority. For more recent figures and more detailed information, including the availability of inspectors' reports to the general public, the hon. Member may wish to approach the chairman of the authority.

Dental Treatment

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Linlithgow of 25 March, Official Report, column 446, if he will give reasons for his refusal to institute a review into the extent to which dental treatment is dictated by the assessment of the patient's ability to pay rather than by the dentist's clinical judgment.

Mr. Hayhoe: There is no reason why dental treatment should be dictated by ability to pay, since National Health Service dental charges have to be paid only by people who can afford them.

McColl Report

Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received on the McColl report on artificial limbs and appliances.

Mr. Newton: We have already received a number of comments from both individuals and organisations, and expect to receive more in response to our earlier invitation to a wide range of interests to send us their views by the end of this month.

Prevention of Disablement

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consideration he has given to the conclusions of the national seminar on the prevention of disablement, held at the Royal Society on 3 to 4 February; if there is any action he is taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The conclusions reached by the seminar cover a very wide field. These are being considered at present and a response will be made to the IMPACT Foundation which promoted the seminar.

Art and Music Therapy

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will outline his Department's policy in providing art and music therapy services in the community; and what arrangements the Department is making to transfer funds or provide resources for such therapists in the community.

(2) what plans there are to establish therapy and paramedical centres in the community for mentally ill or mentally handicapped people in order to prevent them being admitted or readmitted to large institutions or hospitals.

Mr. Whitney: It is for health authorities and social services authorities jointly to plan local services for mentally ill and mentally handicapped people, including increasing community provision designed to reduce the need to admit people to in-patient care. In general it is for those authorities to decide what facilities and professional staff they will provide within their services, and details are not centrally available, but I am aware that a number of authorities make good use of art and music therapy.

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many music and art therapists are employed in the community.

Mr. Whitney: Information on the number of art and music therapists employed in the community is not collected centrally.

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps are being taken to ensure that professional standards and requirements for employment of music and art therapists as outlined in PM(82)6 are being applied in the community.

Mr. Whitney: The standards and professional requirements in art and music therapists who are employed by health authorities and who are working in the community are set out in PM(82)6. Responsibility for determining appropriate standards for such therapists employed in the community services of local authorities is a matter for the local authority concerned.

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many residents discharged from mental illness or mental handicap hospitals, over the last five years, who were given art or music therapy whilst in hospital, do not receive this treatment in the community.

Mr. Whitney: This information is not collected centrally.

Benefits

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the per capita expenditure on social security benefits in England in the last year for which figures are available;

(2) what was the per capita expenditure on social security benefits in Wales in the last year for which figures are available;

(3) what was the per capita expenditure on social security benefits in Scotland in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 17 April 1986, c. 452]: Estimated per capita expenditure on social security benefits in 1984-85 was as follows:

England	641
Wales	714
Scotland	700

This analysis covers about 95 per cent. of total benefit expenditure in Great Britain. A breakdown of the remainder is not available.

THE ARTS

Roundhouse Black Arts Centre

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts whether he intends to take any action in respect of the future funding of the Roundhouse Black Arts Centre.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts is currently abroad, and he will reply as soon as possible.

CIVIL SERVICE

Accountants

Mr. Richard Wainwright asked the Minister for the Civil Service how many qualified accountants in the Civil Service are expected to retire during the next five years.

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Civil Service is currently abroad. I have been asked to reply.

A precise forecast is not possible. Central statistics show that there were 130 qualified staff aged 55 or above on 1 January 1986. However, not all these staff can be expected to retire in the next five years, as in some areas staff may expect to, and often do, work beyond the age of 60.

Mr. Wainwright asked the Minister for the Civil Service what progress has been made towards the Government's target number of qualified accountants in the Civil Service; and what further measures in this respect are now planned.

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Civil Service is currently abroad. I have been asked to reply.

Excluding staff employed by the royal ordnance factories, who have since left the Civil Service, there were some 600 qualified accountants employed in 1982. There are now about 700, an increase of approximately 16 per cent. A number of further measures have been taken to improve the recruitment, training and retention of such staff. In particular, the number of internal trainees has significantly increased, and will grow still further with the establishment this year of a central training pool offering an additional 60 to 70 places a year. Substantial increases in allowances for qualified staff have been offered this year, and very many more staff are now eligible for such allowances than in 1982.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Pay Negotiations (Profit-Sharing)

88. Mr. Ryder asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to discuss with employers the feasibility of introducing a greater element of profit sharing into pay negotiations.

Mr. MacGregor: As foreshadowed in my right hon. Friend's Budget speech, there will be preliminary discussions with employers and others over the next few weeks about the feasibility and benefits of introducing a measure of temporary tax relief to encourage profit sharing agreements which link a significant part of an employee's pay to profits. If these preliminary discussions are sufficiently encouraging, we would prepare a consultative document setting out a detailed scheme for wider consultation.

Petrol and Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the yield in 1985-86 and 1986-87 from (a) petrol duty, (b) derv duty, (c) vehicle excise duty, (d) value added tax on petrol and derv sales and (e) value added tax on motor vehicle sales.

Mr. Brooke: Estimates are as follows:

	£ million 1985-86	£ million 1986-87
(a) Petrol duty	5,050	5,700
(b) Derv	1,250	1,450
(c) Vehicle excise duty	2,415	2,445
(d) VAT on petrol and Derv sales	1,005	1,125
(e) VAT on motor vehicle sales	1,690	1,850

Accountants (Pay)

Mr. Wainwright asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his response to the claim for a special pay allowance for qualified accountants at principal level; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: No final response has yet been given; discussions are continuing with the trade unions concerned.

Income Tax

Mr. Meacher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the gain from the 1p cut in the £ in income tax to a taxpayer with a wife and two children aged five and 11 years earning £5,000, £7,500, £10,000, £15,000, £20,000, £30,000, £50,000 and £100,000 per annum respectively.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 14 April 1986, c. 314]: Compared with statutory indexation of allowances and thresholds, the Budget proposals for income tax comprise a 1p reduction in the basic rate and lower threshold for tax rates above 40 per cent. The net effects of these proposals for a married man at the specified levels of earnings are shown below. It is assumed that the wife has no earnings and that no allowances and reliefs are available other than the married man's allowance.

Gains from Budget income tax proposals compared with indexation

Earnings £ per annum	£ per annum	£ per week	As percentage of earnings
5,000	13·45	0·26	0·27
7,500	38·45	0·74	0·51
10,000	63·45	1·22	0·63
15,000	113·45	2·18	0·76
20,000	163·45	3·14	0·82
30,000	137·00	2·63	0·46
50,000	12·00	0·23	0·02

Mr. Michael Marshall asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated effect of the reduction of 1p in the standard rate of income tax on the disposable income of state pensioners; and how many pensioners he estimates will be affected.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 8 April 1986, c. 92]: I regret that information in the form requested in not available for all state pensioners. However, in a full year, at 1986-87 income levels, taxpayers aged 65 and over will gain about £155 million from the Budget proposals, compared with statutory indexation of allowances and thresholds. This includes the effects of the reduction of 1p in the basic rate of income tax and the increases of less than statutory indexation to the second and subsequent higher rate thresholds. All 2·7 million elderly single people and married couples who pay tax will gain.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing, for each member of the European monetary system, the change in the real exchange rate measured in terms of export prices compared to the first quarter of 1979 and the first quarter of 1973 to the latest possible date in each case; and if he will also give the figures at each date in index form based on 1980=100.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 21 April 1986]: Indices of relative export prices in manufacturing as estimated by the International Monetary fund are published in "International Financial Statistics". The following information is derived from that source:

Relative export unit values 1980=100

	1973 Q1	1979 Q1	1985 Q3	Per cent. change 1973 Q1/1985 Q3	Per cent. Change 1979 Q1/1985 Q3

DEFENCE

Small Arms Ammunition

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Defence what are the size, numbers and names of Portuguese manufacturers who have supplied small arms ammunition to the United Kingdom in the years 1981-82, 1982-83, 1983-84 and 1984-85.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Ministry of Defence purchased no small arms ammunition from Portuguese manufacturers in the years 1981-82 to 1984-85.

Signals Regiments

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many former members of the 9 Signals Regiment have been discharged since 3 February 1984.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 4 December 1985, c. 278]: I regret that, due to computer programming error, incorrect information was given. The number of those serving in 9 Signals Regiment on or after 3 February 1984 who had subsequently been discharged from that regiment was 63, rather than 121 as originally stated.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many former members of 9 Signals Regiment have been discharged before completion of their engagement since 3 February 1984.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 4 December 1985, c. 277]: I regret that, due to computer programming error, incorrect information was given. The number of those serving in 9 Signals Regiment on or after 3 February 1984 who had been discharged from that regiment before completion of their engagements was 38, rather than 83 as originally stated.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many Army personnel have been discharged or are bing discharged as a result of the inquiry into breaches of security at 9 Signals Regiment.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 28 January 1986, c. 446]: I regret that, due to a misunderstanding, incorrect information was given. A further check has shown that the number of Army personnel who had been discharged as a result of the inquiry was one, rather than four as originally stated.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many former members of 14 Signals Regiment have been discharged since 3 February 1984.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 4 December 1985, c. 278]: I regret that, due to a computer programming error, incorrect information was given. The number of those serving in 14 Signals Regiment on or after 3 February 1984 who had subsequently been discharged from that regiment was 62, rather than 81 as originally stated.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many former members of 14 Signals Regiment have been discharged before completion of their engagement since 3 February 1984.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 4 December 1985, c. 278]: I regret that, due to a computer programming error, incorrect information was given. The number of those serving in 14 Signals Regiment on or after 3 February 1984 who had been discharged before completion of their engagements was 28, rather than 50 as originally stated.

Written Answers to Questions

TRANSPORT

Singapore Airlines

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for Transport what evidence is available to his Department about Singapore Airlines receiving subsidies from the Singapore Government to promote the activities of Singapore Airlines in competition with British carriers.

Mr. Michael Spicer: None.

Tolls (Abolition)

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from national road user organisations calling for the abolition of tolls on estuarial crossings following the recommendation of the Transport Committee.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Freight Transport Association, also representing the Automobile Association, the Bus and Coach Council, the Road Haulage Association, the Royal Automobile Club and the Royal Scottish Automobile Club, has asked to discuss the Select Committee's report with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. He is prepared to do so once he has responded to the Chairman of the Committee.

Motorways (Repairs)

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his policy on the current phasing of motorway repair work.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Most motorway major repairs are carried out in the Spring and Summer months when conditions are favourable to the handling of bituminous materials. The longer daylight hours also permit shorter contract times, thus reducing the overall delays to motorway users.

In programming the works, we require them wherever possible to be spaced out over the system in order to reduce congestion. We also normally restrict working lengths to about 2½ miles at major repair sites and about 1¼ miles at smaller scale sites.

Useful reductions in contract times have been obtained by the use of lane rental contracts which give contractors an incentive to finish schemes early.

M1 (Lane Closures)

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for Transport why two stretches of lane closures have been allowed to take place concurrently at or near junction 15 and 16 of the M1 motorway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The two sets of lane closures were part of a major maintenance contract involving resurfacing and installation of lighting. One contractor was responsible for these works which were carried out simultaneously to save time and reduce delays for the public. The road closures and associated contraflow conformed to the Department's required standards for minimum spacing between roadworks.

North Devon Link Road (Inquiry)

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he received the report on stage 2b of the North Devon link road inquiry; and by what date he expects to be able to announce a decision.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friends received the inspector's report last August. Their decision will be announced as soon as possible.

MARPOL Convention

Mr. Hicks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, pursuant to his answer of 17 April, Official Report Volume 95, column 479, he will make a statement on the ratification by the United Kingdom of Annexes III and V of the MARPOL Convention on the carriage of harmful substances in packaged forms and the disposal of garbage from ships.

Mr. Ridley: The Government have now decided that the United Kingdom should ratify annexes III and V of the MARPOL Convention. Annex III is concerned with the packaging, labelling, stowage and documentation of packaged harmful substances carried at sea, and the effect of the provisions is to minimise the risk of pollution at sea and on shore through the loss of such packages. Annex V prohibits the discharge of certain types of garbage within specified distances from the coast. It also imposes a total prohibition on the discharge of plastics anywhere at sea.

The provisions of the annexes do not come into force until they have been ratified by a certain proportion of maritime nations. With ratification by the United Kingdom that proportion should soon be reached.

Hazardous Materials (Transportation)

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the level of staff available to the Health and Safety Executive to enforce the regulations governing the transportation of hazardous materials; and if he will make a statement on the consequent level of protection of the public in the event of an accident.

Mr. Trippier: I have been asked to reply.

Responsibility for enforcing the regulations governing the transport by road of dangerous substances is currently shared between the Health and Safety Executive, local authorities and the police. Figures for the number of staff involved in this work are not available. I am satisfied that these arrangements provide an adequate level of enforcement.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Hong Kong

Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is yet in a position to respond to the requests made by the Legislative Council of Hong Kong concerning the draft Hong Kong (British Nationality) Order in Council.

Mr. Hurd: The Government have carefully considered the requests made by the Legislative Council and have held detailed discussions with the Hong Kong Government. We have also taken fully into account the views expressed in the debates in Parliament in January and in the Legislative Council, a well as representations put to us by organisations and individuals in Hong Kong.

The Council's first request was that we should provide an endorsement in the British National (Overseas) passport making it clear that the holder did not require a visa or entry certificate to visit the United Kingdom. The Government will meet this request. As we have made clear on many occasions, visitors from Hong Kong are welcome to come to the United Kingdom. British Dependent Territories citizens do not have to obtain a visa in advance to visit the United Kingdom. This is the position under the current immigration rules and this Government have no intention of introducing any visa requirement for such visitors. This is understandably a matter of great importance to people in Hong Kong. In response to their wishes, therefore, the Government have agreed that an endorsement reflecting this position should be placed in the new British National (Overseas) passports. The endorsement will read:

"In accordance with the United Kingdom Immigration Rules, the holder of this passport does not require an entry certificate or visa to visit the United Kingdom."

A leaflet will be issued with each passport explaining the endorsement and the position under the immigration rules

The Council's second request was that former service men in Hong Kong who served in the defence of Hong Kong in the second world war should be granted British citizenship. The number involved is about 270. In view of their particular service the Government will meet the spirit of this request. It is not possible under the British Nationality Act 1981 to confer British citizenship on them all regardless of the nature of their service or their present citizenship. But I will consider sympathetically applications for registration as British citizens under section 4(5) of the British Nationality Act 1981 from any who are eligible under this provision because they are British Dependent Territories citizens or other British nationals and because they served under the Government of Hong Kong, for example in the Hong Kong Volunteers. The number who might be eligible is likely to be about 60. I am also ready from today to accept and grant applications from any of the 270 or so former service men in Hong Kong together with their dependants who wish to come to the United Kingdom for settlement.

The Council's third request was that those British Dependent Territories citizens who were not ethnically Chinese should be granted British citizenship rather than British Overseas citizenship if after 1 July 1997 they would otherwise be stateless. There are at present about 11,500 British Dependent Territories citizens who might be affected by this provision. The Government have carefully considered all the arguments put forward in support of this request, but we have concluded that the granting of British citizenship is not justified in the present circumstances. We are satisfied that we shall be able properly to meet the needs of these citizens, their children and their grandchildren for an accepted citizenship status and for a place to call their home. This will be ensured through the guarantees of right of abode in Hong Kong after 1997 provided in the agreement with the People's Republic of China, and through the provision of British Overseas citizenship status for any who would otherwise be stateless, down to the second generation born after 1997. British citizenship would not strengthen the position of those communities in Hong Kong. If, however, any British national were in the future to come under pressure to leave Hong Kong, we would expect the Government of the day to consider sympathetically the case for admission to the United Kingdom.

We believe our response to the legislative Council has shown that we pay close attention to the views expressed by the Council and the people of Hong Kong and that, as a result, the nationality provisions for Hong Kong have been clarified and improved. We believe it would be right now to put in place the nationality provisions which have been extensively discussed in Parliament and in Hong Kong so that detailed planning work can continue without delay. I intend therefore to lay the draft Order in Council before the House in the next few days.

Local Elections

59. Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the average turnout of the electorate in local government elections over the last five years.

Mr. Mellor: Information of this kind is not collected by central Government.

Prison Officers

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison officers are currently employed in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement on recent talks on their pay and conditions of service.

Mr. Mellor: The number of staff in post in the prison officer class in England and Wales on 1 April 1986 was 18,890 full-time and 24½ part-time.

The second part of the hon. Member's question is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Brixton Prison (Strip Searches)

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions strip-searching of women in Brixton prison has led to the discovery of any prohibited materials.

Mr. Mellor: The justification for strip searching (which is a routine security measure to which all prisoners —male and female—are subject) lies not only in the fact that staff do discover items (such as drugs, syringes, plastic knives sharpened into daggers, and scissors) which they would not otherwise find, but also in the deterrent effect which such searching undoubtedly has. As regards the three women prisoners who are on remand in Brixton, on no occasion, up to and including Friday, 18 April, has a strip search led to the discovery of prohibited articles.

Foreign Visa Holders (Passports)

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to simplify and clarify the statement stamped on the passports of foreign visa holders by his immigration department, namely:

"This will apply unless superseded to any subsequent leave the holder may obtain after an absence from the United Kingdom within the period limited as above".

Mr. Waddington: The purpose of the endorsement is to enable the holder of the passport to be readmitted on the same conditions after a trip abroad. In order to achieve this result the endorsement follows the wording of section 3(3)(b) of the Immigration Act 1971.

Criminal Injuries

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for criminal injuries compensation are now in front of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board; what is the average length of time it now takes to deal with them; and what steps he is taking to expedite the processing of those less complicated cases presented by injured police officers.

Mr. Mellor: The number of applications before the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board at the end of March 1986 was about 51,000. Information is not available about the average time taken to deal with applications. As stated in the board's last annual report (Cmnd. 9684, paragraph 5), three quarters of the cases resolved in the 1984-85 financial year were resolved within a year of receipt. Less complicated cases, which require fewer inquiries to be made, will usually be resolved more quickly than others, but all applications, whether or not from police officers, and whether complicated or straightforward, are dealt with as expeditiously as possible given the resources available.

Inner City Policing

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent requests he has received for increasing police establishments citing as one ground an increased requirement for policing inner city areas.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The new police authorities for Merseyside, Northumbria and South Yorkshire, which took over responsibility on 1 April 1986, included proposals for increases in their police establishments in their manpower plans for the financial year 1986-87. The additional posts were intended for a range of purposes, including in some instances deployment in inner city areas. My right hon. Friend approved 72 additional police posts for Merseyside and nine for South Yorkshire.

Libyan Nationals

Mr. Dicks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will arrange for the immediate deportation of all Libyans now resident in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to his question yesterday, at column 173.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Mature Students

Dr. Hampson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish for each year from 1979 the numbers of mature students in higher education, the proportion they formed of total student numbers and his estimates of the proportion they will form over the next five years.

Mr. Walden: Information for full-time and sandwich home students in Great Britain higher education is as follows:

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984
Mature students (000's)	179	184	193	195	202	206
Mature students as a percentage of all home students	39·7	39·5	39·5	38·7	39·0	39·3

The proportion of mature students in the total students population is expected to rise by one or two percentage points in the next five years.

Adult Education

Dr. Hampson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what percentage of the educational budget is spent on adult education;

(2) how much is spent each year on (a) adult education and (b) extra-mural university departments.

Mr. Walden: The information is as follows:

	Estimated expenditure in 1984-85 £ million	As a percentage of total expenditure on education percentage
Maintained adult education centres*	96	0·71
University extra-mural departments†	5	0·04
Other bodies‡	8	0·06
TOTAL	109	0·81

* Does not include expenditure on adult and continuing education provided in polytechnics and other maintained further education establishments.

† Does not include expenditure on adult and continuing education provided within other university departments or in the Open University.

‡ Includes expenditure by the Workers' Education Associaton, long-term residential colleges and national associations involved in the promotion or provision of adult education.

Youth Service

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the scope and objectives of his Department's circular 1/85 "Youth Service".

Mr. Dunn: Replies from 76 local education authorities have so far been received. Steps are being taken to assemble the remaining responses and to obtain any further information necessary to a proper study of the matters raised in circular 1/85. I shall write further to my hon. Friend about this in due course.

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many local education authorities have yet to respond to his Department's circular 1/85 "Youth Service".

Mr. Dunn: Twenty-two local education authorities have not yet replied substantively.

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps are being taken to ensure that all local education authorities respond to his Department's circular 1/85 "Youth Service".

Mr. Dunn: The majority of all authorities have now responded to this circular and others are being asked to respond in the near future. Some responses have been delayed pending local reviews of youth service arrangements.

Staffordshire

Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the Staffordshire education capital expenditure allocation at outturn and constant prices in each year from 1981-82 to 1986-87; and what was the original bid received by his Department for each year.

Mr. Dunn: The information is as follows:

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Exports (US Controls)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Attorney-General if the Lord Chancellor will accept tenders for the computerisation of his Department and the United Kingdom judicial system for companies which seek to impose United States extraterritorial controls on their United Kingdom staff, or on United Kingdom exports, or on United Kingdom non-Government customers; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Acquisitions of computer equipment will be made by the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency, whose policy was set out in the answer given by the Minister of State, Treasury, in response to a question from the hon. Member on 8 April, at column 95.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Attorney-General what is his policy on the acquisition for the use of his Department of computers and equipment supplied by companies which seek to impose extraterritorial United States controls on their United Kingdom staff or on non-Government United Kingdom customers or on exports from the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Acquisitions of computers for my Department are made by the CCTA, whose policy was set out in the answer given by the Minister of State, Treasury in response to a question from the hon. Member on 8 April, at column 95. My policy in respect of any high technology equipment purchased directly by my Department would be the same.

Member's Correspondence

Mr. Ashdown asked the Attorney-General when the hon. Member for Yeovil can expect a reply to his letters of 7 and 26 February.

The Attorney-General: As I told the hon. Member in my letter of 4 March, his letters touched on matters which went beyond the responsibilities of my Department and had to be looked into. This has now been done and I have replied.

PRIME MINISTER

Libya (United States Raid)

Mr. Nellist asked the Prime Minister how many representations the Government have now received for and against the United Kingdom's support for the American bombing of Libya.

The Prime Minister: Up to and including Tuesday 22 April the Government have received about 9,750 representations against, and about 3,130 representations for the United Kingdom's support of the United States action.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister whether the Government of the United States of America have provided her with any information to substantiate their claim that the civil aircraft destroyed on the ground at Tripoli airport had been used to ferry terrorists and terrorist materials to their objectives; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: As far as we are aware no civil aircraft were destroyed in the United States attack on Tripoli military airport.

EMPLOYMENT

Departmental Staff

Mr. Arnold asked the Paymaster General if he will list the responsibilities of each of the deputy secretaries in his Department and the number and ranks of staff reporting to each.

Mr. Lang: The information at 1 April 1986 is as follows:

Deputy Secretary:
Inner cities initiative, small firms and tourism, manpower policy, economic and social division and European Community Business.
Three grade 3, one grade 4, 15 grade 5 and 447 other staff.

Deputy Secretary:
International employment issues and labour attaché service, health and safety, industrial relations, unemployment benefit service, statistics division and information division.
Four grade 3, one grade 4, 12 grade 5 and 28,208 other staff.

Deputy Secretary:
Solicitors Office
Four grade 5, and 25 other staff.

Departmental Offices

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Paymaster General if he will give details of the numbers employed in each of the following offices in Norfolk (a) unemployment benefit offices and (b) jobcentres.

Mr. Lang: At 1 April 1986 in Norfolk there were (a) 299 staff employed in unemployment benefit offices and *(b)*112·5 staff employed in jobcentres.

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Paymaster General if he will give details of the numbers employed in the unemployment benefit office and in the jobcentre in (a) Cromer, (b) North Walsham and (c) Fakenham.

Mr. Lang: At 1 April 1986 the following numbers of staff were employed:
(a) Cromer unemployment benefit office 23 (including staff at the linked part-time office at North Walsham), Cromer jobcentre 3; (b) North Walsham jobcentre 1·5; (c) Fakenham unemployment benefit office 9, Fakenham jobcentre 2.

Young Workers' Scheme

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General if he will provide figures showing the total number of jobs covered by the young workers scheme and the annual costs of the scheme in each year since it was first started; how many jobs are currently covered by the scheme and what is its cost; and if he will estimate the net job creation effect of the scheme.

Mr. Lang: There have been over 436,000 approved applications since the schemes inception at an annual cost of:

£ million

1982-83 Outturn	1983-84 Outturn	1984-85 Outturn	1985-86 Total	1986-87 Supply estimate
41	58	41	*32	19

* Provisional.

The coverage at the end of February 1986 was 55,000. it is estimated that the net job creation effect of the scheme is 27 per cent.

EC Economic and Social Committee

Mr. Knox asked the Paymaster General whether he is considering appointing representatives from the managerial, professional and staff liaison group to group II of the Economic and Social Committee of the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I have received a nomination from the managerial, professional and staff liaison group for membership of Economic and Social Committee. The nomination will be considered, together with other nominations, in due course.

Self-employed Persons (Incomes)

Mr. Sheerman asked the Paymaster General what is the distribution of incomes among the 457,000 new jobs that have been created since March 1983 that are classified as self-employed.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 21 April 1986, c. 28]: I regret that the information requested is not available.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Famine Relief

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give his most recent assessment of the priority objectives for food aid and its distribution in the drought-affected countries of Sub-Saharan Africa.

Mr. Raison: We hold firmly to the view that famine relief should be given priority in determining the use of food aid.

Following abundant rains in many parts of Africa last year the need for emergency food aid is greatly reduced, but there is still a number of countries needing assistance. Together with other donors we are concentrating our bilateral food aid on those that remain most seriously affected, and on ensuring that it is distributed to the people who need it.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Surgical Dressings

Mr. Peter Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations his Department has received from the Surgical Dressings Manufacturers' Association on the multi-fibre arrangement, and, in particular, on the exclusion of gauze dressings from the European Economic Community's current classification for multi-fibre arrangement purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Surgical Dressings Manufacturers Association has made a number of representations about the treatment of gauze dressings. The classification of these products within the pharmaceuticals chapter of the tariff means they are not included in the bilateral agreements negotiated by the European Community under the multi-fibre arrangement. China, the main exporter of these products, agreed (outside its bilateral agreement) to restrain its exports of these products for the period 1984 to 1988.

Mr. Peter Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is satisfied with the observance by the Chinese authorities of the voluntary restraint arrangement applying to exports of gauze dressings to the United Kingdom and other European Economic Community countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: China has agreed, outside the scope of its bilateral MFA agreement with the Community, to limit its exports of gauze dressings for the period 1984-88. The agreement is being monitored closely by the Community. In 1985 there appear to have been some overshipment to the United Kingdom, but the quantity concerned is relatively small. The matter has been raised with the Chinese authorities.

Mr. Peter Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing United Kingdom imports from 1982 to 1985 of gauze dressings under tariff heading 30.04.3100 from China and other countries with which the European Economic Community has agreements under the multi-fibre arrangement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is as follows:

NORTHERN IRELAND

Social Security Payments

Mr. Archer asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the latest available figures for the numbers of single social security payments in Northern Ireland per annum to (a) pensioner couples, (b) single pensioners, (c) unemployed people with children, (d) unemployed people without children, (e) lone parents, (f) sick and disabled people and (g) the remaining categories of people, including in each category the average size of payment, and the regulations under which payments were made.

Mr. Needham: Information in the precise form requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The latest available information is as follows:

WALES

NHS (Consultants)

Mr. Gwilym Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many additional consultants have been appointed to the National Health Service in Wales since 1979; in what specialties; and what effect this has had on the respective waiting lists.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The table gives, by speciality, the numbers of hospital consultants employed by the National Health Service in Wales, in terms of whole-time equivalents at 30 September 1979 and 30 September 1985. Information is also provided on the change in inpatient and outpatient waiting lists over this period and on changes in the throughput of inpatient and outpatient cases between 1979 and 1984.

ADAS (Welsh Language)

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many employees of the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service in (a) Dyfed, (b) Powys and (c) Gwynedd are unable to converse in Welsh; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The numbers of Agricultural Development and Advisory Service advisers who do not speak Welsh in Dyfed, Powys and Gwynedd respectively are 43, 28 and 11. These figures do not include veterinary investigation centres and headquarters specialist staff.

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many employees of the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service in (a) Ceredigion, (b) Pembroke, (c) Carmarthen, (d) Meirion, (e) Arfon and (f) Ynys Môn speak Welsh; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Agricultural Development and Advisory Service advisors' areas do not coincide with local authority districts. The number of Welsh speaking advisors in Dyfed, which includes the districts of Ceredigion, Pembroke and Carmarthen, is 27. The number of Welsh speaking advisors in Gwynedd, which includes the districts of Meirion, Arfon and Ynys Môn, is 23. These figures do not include veterinary investigation centres and headquarters specialist staff.

Outgoers Scheme

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has come to an agreement with the Farmers Union of Wales and the National Farmers Union on the milk outgoers scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Discussions on the proposed EC outgoers' scheme have taken place with all interested parties, including the Farmers Union of Wales and the National Farmers Union in Wales.

We have noted their views and will take account of these in the further negotiations on the current CAP price-fixing proposals.

Dairy Industry

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any further plans to help the Milk Marketing Board and dairy farmers in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Dairy farmers in Wales continue to benefit from the England and Wales arrangements of the Milk Marketing Board.

Private Sewers

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will introduce legislation to provide for grants to be available towards the cost of laying private sewers where a local authority has served a notice requiring execution of works of drainage and so on in existing buildings under section 59 of the Building Act 1984 on the grounds that existing on-site drainage is inadequate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The provision and maintenance of private sewers is currently a matter for the owners of the properties concerned. The Government have no plans at present to provide grants to deal with cases which arise under section 59 of the Building Act 1984. The Government have recently issued a consultation paper on the review of water and sewerage law in which it is proposed that all private sewers should be taken into the ownership of water service public limited companies.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the current size of the waiting list for treatment of all kinds in Welsh hospitals; and how this figure compares with those for April 1983 and April 1979.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Waiting list figures are not available for the months requested, but the following table gives the nearest equivalent figures:

	In-patient	Out-patient
31 March 1979	37,955	56,540
31 March 1983	38,735	64,079
30 September 1985	41,212	88,608

Hospital Closures

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many hospitals have been closed in Wales in each year since 1975; and if he will name them.

Mr. Mark Robinson: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 15 April 1986, at column 348.

NHS Beds

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the ratio of National Health Service beds to population in Wales; and how this compares with the figures for April 1983 and April 1979.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information is not available for the months requested. For the nearest equivalent dates the figures are as follows:

Ratio of staffed beds allocated per 1,000 population, Wales (all specialties)

	Ratio
31 March 1979	8·4
31 March 1983	8·1
30 September 1985	7·9

The reduction largely is due to the move towards community care for the mentally ill and mentally handicapped, thereby reducing hospital beds for such categories.

EUROPEAN COMMUNITY

Budgetary Procedure

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions there have been with European Economic Community counterparts concerning reform of budgetary procedure.

Mrs. Chalker: The Foreign Affairs Council had a general discussion of the Community's budgetary situation on 21 April. My right hon. and learned Friend and I have had a number of bilateral discussions with our EC colleagues. Budget issues are on the agenda of the Council of Finance Ministers on 28 April.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Twinning

58. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will issue guidelines to local authorities on the criteria for selection of foreign cities or countries as partners in twinning arrangements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The United Kingdom's twinning agency is the Joint Twinning Committee of Local Authority Associations of Great Britain and Northern Ireland (the JTC), whose secretariat is staffed and housed by the British Council. The JTC gives guidance and practical assistance to British localities which are seeking a partner.

Cyprus (Stolen Car Sales)

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why he has refused permission for a senior police officer and an expert witness to travel to northern Cyprus to give evidence in a case concerning many stolen British cars which have been taken to that island and then sold illegally.

Mr. Eggar: No such request has been made, but I understand that the two police forces are in touch about the best way to proceed. We are naturally concerned that those responsible for these thefts should be brought to justice.

Overseas Court Cases (British Witnesses)

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria he exercises and what advice he gives when material witnesses of British nationality are asked to give evidence in court cases in countries which the United Kingdom does not recognise officially at the present time.

Mr. Renton: We regard the situation where a British national is asked to give evidence in a court in a foreign country as a matter between that person and the relevant foreign authority. If my hon. Friend would like to write with specific details of any particular case we will be happy to look into the matter.

EC (Third World Food Aid)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what quantities of beef, butter and wheat have been exported to Libya in the current year under the EEC programme for assistance to the Third world; what has been the cost; from what fund the subsidy is met; what consideration has been given to halting this trade; whether he will now introduce an embargo on all trade with Libya; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Libya is not one of the authorised recipient countries qualifying for European Community food aid and has received no such aid. My right hon. and learned Friend has raised with his EC colleagues the urgent need to examine what uncovenanted benefits Libya may have received from the Community's management of agricultural markets. The possibility of a trade embargo has been considered on a number of occasions; we have always concluded that it would be inappropriate and ineffective.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Foreign Visitors (Social Benefits)

Mr. John Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what social benefits are available to visitors to the United Kingdom or to those granted leave to enter for a definite period.

Mr. Major: I assume that my hon. Friend is referring to social security benefits. People granted limited leave to enter or remain, which includes visitors to the United Kingdom, would not be able to fulfil the various residence and contribution tests, or other specific tests, which are attached to most social security benefits. Such people have to show that they can be maintained and accommodated without recourse to public funds. In some circumstances, where a person has been given limited leave and the Home Office has his status under consideration, supplementary benefit—which has no residence or contribution tests—may be paid on an urgent needs basis.

Alcoholism

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what resources and assistance the Health Education Council is making available to Action on Alcohol Abuse.

Mr. Whitney: The Health Education Council is making no resources or assistance available to Action on Alcohol Abuse.

Conductive Education

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which Ministers from his Department, and which civil servants, have visited Hungary since 1979 to study conductive education; at what cost; for how long the visit lasted; what was the itinerary of the visit; what were the findings; if he will place details of the outcome of the visit in the Library; and what discussions took place subsequent to the visit with (a) the Spastics Society or (b) any other body on the findings.

Mr. Whitney: During an official visit to Hungary in November 1984, at the invitation of the Hungarian Minister of Health, my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Rushcliffe (Mr. Clarke), the then Minister for Health, visited the Peto Educational and Training Institute for children with motor disorders in Budapest as part of a programme of visits to various health establishments in Hungary. He was very impressed by the training programmes being undertaken to help motor and neurologically impaired children. No officials from this Department have visited Hungary since 1979 to study conductive education. Since my right hon. and learned Friend's visit however officials have had discussions with the Spastics Society and the Parkinsons Disease Society about conductive education. They have also met the district physiotherapist of Barnet health authority and a member of the Chartered Society of Physiotherapists, who gave details of their visits to the Peto Institute. Officials from this Department and the Department of Education and Science will shortly be discussing with the Spastics Society its application for funding in respect of a study of current provision and an evaluation of the implications of wider development of the system in this country.

McColl Committee

Mr. Peter Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has about the patient to prosthetist ratio in the countries visited by members of the McColl committee on artificial limbs and appliances.

Mr. Newton: The McColl committee did not collect this information for countries outside the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to publish his considered response to the McColl report on artificial limbs and appliances.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mr. Flannery) on 25 March, at column 451.

Nurses

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to reduce the national shortage of qualified intensive care unit nurses.

Mr. Hayhoe: It is for health authorities to decide, in the light of local needs and priorities and the resources available to them, how many nurses they should employ who have received training in intensive care and how many trainees they should second to meet those needs. Most regional health authorities have been asked to refine the manpower planning and training components of their strategic plans and in considering these particular attention will be paid to proposals for staff groups who may be in short supply.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Council of Agriculture Ministers

Mr. Maclennan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Council of Agriculture Ministers meeting on 21 and 22 April.

Mr. Jopling: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Food Sales

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what sales of food have been concluded to date by the EC under regulation 765/86; and if he will give details of the countries to which such sales have been concluded and, in each case, the amount of food and the price of sale expressed in terms of pence per pound;

(2) to which countries the EC was authorised to export food at special prices under regulation 765/86; and if any sales to Libya have been contracted under this regulation;

(3) if he will propose at the next meeting of the Council of Ministers that no further export rebates should be paid by the EC in respect of exports of food to Libya; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if the EC is authorised under the meeting of the protocol committee of 1 May 1985 to sell butter to Libya at prices below the minimum specified by the general agreement on tariffs and trade; and if any such sales have been contracted for;

(5) what sales of butter to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics have been completed under regulations 765/86.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will take steps to cease the shipment of beef and other commodities from Scotland to Libya; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what was the total cost to the taxpayer for the half value of the 700 tonnes of beef which was shipped to Libya from Troon in Aryshire on 19 April; and what further liabilities will be borne by the British taxpayer in planned future dispatches;

(3) why Her Majesty's Government paid half the cost of shipment of 700 tonnes of beef despatched from Troon, Scotland, on 19 April consigned to Libya; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friends as soon as possible.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what amount of food has been exported by the EEC to Libya over the most recent 12 months for which figures are available; what were the comparable figures in each of the previous four years; and what was the total of export rebates provided in respect of each year's sales, respectively.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Export Refunds

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each agricultural product the amount of export refunds per tonne granted to British exporters at the most recent available date and tne total spent by way of such refunds in 1985.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

2. Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next expects to meet the local authority associations to discuss the Green Paper, "Paying for Local Government".

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I am next due to meet the associations at the Consultative Council on Local Government Finance on 7 July.

7. Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many submissions he had received by 18 April in response to the Green Paper, "Paying for Local Government".

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Over 400.

17. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will extend the consultation period in respect of the Green Paper, "Paying for Local Government".

Mr. Waldegrave: Following representations from the local authority associations, I announced on 19 March that the consultation period would be extended to 31 October. I see no justification for any further extension.

41. Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many responses he has so far received to the Green Paper, "Paying for Local Government".

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which my right hon. Friend gave today to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Central (Mr. Caborn).

Rates

11. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the average increase in domestic rates and non-domestic rates in (a) London and (b) the remainder of England in April 1986.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: On average, in London, domestic rates fell by 3·9 per cent. and non-domestic rates by 2·3 per cent.; in the rest of England there were rises of 18·3 per cent. and 16·4 per cent. respectively. The average increase for domestic rates in the whole of England is 13½ per cent., and for non-domestic rates 10·4 per cent., but these figures of course conceal wide variations.

34. Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the average increase in domestic and non-domestic rates in England in April 1986.

Mrs. Rumbold: Domestic and non-domestic rates in England rose by 13·5 and 10·4 per cent. respectively.

52. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give a figure for the losses to local authorities in London due to the late setting of rates in 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is for the independent district auditor to decide whether or not losses arose and, if so, to what extent, in those authorities which delayed setting a rate for 1985-86.

District Auditors

21. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to remove the power of district auditors to initiate further proceedings against councillors for delays in setting a rate; and if he will make a statement.

55. Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to seek to amend the legislation governing the role of district auditors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have no plans to introduce legislation to change the role and powers of auditors appointed by the Audit Commission.

Multiple Occupation

22. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress to resolve the problems associated with houses in multiple occupancy.

Sir George Young: My Department is undertaking a major research project on houses in multiple occupation. The results of the first stage were announced in February; those of the main survey are expected later this year. I wish to see the outcome of this research before deciding whether further measures are necessary to deal with problems associated with houses in multiple occupation. In the meantime, I hope to publish in May a new circular on houses in multiple occupation about the wide-ranging powers already available to local authorities.

Rented Accommodation

23. Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has further proposals to increase the provision of assured tenancies.

Mr. John Patten: I tabled amendments to the Housing and Planning Bill on 18 March to extend the assured tenancy scheme. These will allow approved landlords to let existing property on assured tenancy terms provided the property has first been substantially improved or repaired, or has been converted.

25. Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will take steps to seek to relax the operation of the Rent Acts in relation to private tenancies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The Government have no proposals for any major reform of the Rent Acts in this Parliament. However, it remains our wish to encourage the supply for more homes to let in the private rented sector. In order to provide greater scope for responsible landlords approved by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to invest in rented accommodation, I tabled on 18 March amendments to the Housing and Planning Bill to extend the assured tenancy scheme to improved property.

Listed Buildings (Demolition)

24. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many listed buildings were demolished in the last 12 months for which figures are available; and what proportion of the total this represents.

Mr. Tracey: In the 12-month period ending on 31 December 1985 consent was granted for the demolition of 204 listed buildings and the partial demolition of a further 2,372. These figures represent 0·06 per cent. and 0·7 per cent. respectively of the 338,079 buildings on the statutory list at the start of that period.

Council House Sales

26. Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest figure available of council house sales under the legislation granting tenants the right to buy their rented accommodation.

Mr. John Patten: A total of 520,000 local authority and new town houses and flats had been sold in England under the right-to-buy legislation by the end of December 1985. Over the period 1979 to 1985 there have been a further 167,000 sales by agreement to sitting tenants, on terms comparable with the right to buy.

Local Government

27. Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to define and confine the role and competence of local government.

Mrs. Rumbold: I have no plans to do so at present.

Football Crowds

28. Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next expects to meet representatives of the football authorities to discuss crowd behaviour.

Mr. Tracey: No formal meeting is currently planned, but we continue to co-operate closely and informally with the football authorities. In particular, we are taking forward arrangements for the Mexico World Cup.

Car Rallies (Spectator Safety)

29. Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he plans to hold talks with the organising body of motor sport in the United Kingdom, the Royal Automobile Club, on the safety of spectators during car rally events; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: I have no plans to do so.

Rallies are authorised by the Royal Automobile Club Motor Sports Association Ltd. on behalf of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport under the Road Traffic Act 1972.

Marine Nature Reserve

30. Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is yet in a position to announce the establishment of the first marine nature reserve.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Nature Conservancy Council expects to commence formal consultations on detailed proposals for at least one site next month. If there are no unforeseen difficulties, the council is expected to put formal proposals to my right hon. Friend later in the summer.

Voluntary Organisations (Funding)

31. Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he proposes meeting representatives of voluntary organisations to discuss the arrangements made in London and the metropolitan areas for continued funding of voluntary organisations.

Sir George Young: I refer to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Coventry, North-East (Mr. Park).

Local Government Services (Privatisation)

32. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes to publish a White Paper on the privatisation of local government services.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have no plans to publish a White Paper on this subject.

Tobacco Companies (Sports Sponsorship)

33. Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the latest figures for the level of sponsorship of sport by tobacco companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given on 10 April to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher), at column 169.

49. Mr. John Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent discussions have taken place between the Minister with responsibility for sport and representatives of the tobacco industry regarding the sponsorship of sport.

Mr. Tracey: I met representatives of the tobacco industry on 19 March formally to open the renegotiation of the voluntary agreement on sports sponsorship.

Regional Government

35. Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to consider the introduction of regional government in England.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has no such plans.

Water Authorities (Privatisation)

36. Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many submissions he has received in response to the White Paper on water privatisation published in February.

51. Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many responses he has received to the White paper "Privatisation of the Water Authorities in England and Wales", published in February 1986.

Mr. John Patten: My Department has received 112 letters from organisations and others interested following publication of the White Paper.

42. Mr. Blair asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next intends meeting representatives of the water authorities to discuss the White Paper on privatisation of the water authorities in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: I expect to have a meeting with the water authority chairmen within the next few weeks, at which privatisation will not doubt be discussed.

Single-tier Local Government

37. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to extend single-tier local government to areas outside the metropolitan areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Angela Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) on 17 April, at column 475.

Reema PRC Homes

38. Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects an approved repair scheme to be available for Reema PRC homes.

Mr. John Patten: A method of repair for Reema hollow panel houses is now being appraised by PRC Homes Ltd. I understand that this will involve repairing one house as a prototype and will therefore take some weeks yet. I cannot of course say what the outcome of PRC Homes' appraisal will be.

Housing Defects

39. Mr. Penhaligon asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate the number of houses repaired to date under the Housing Defects Act.

Mr. John Patten: I regret that reliable information is not currently available. Arrangements are in hand to collect more detailed information and results should be available by the autumn.

45. Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about defective properties in Basildon.

Mr. Tracey: My hon. Friend has himself made representations about potential structural problems affecting saleability of Lindsay Parkinson HSSB houses built by the Basildon development corporation. My Department has also recently received a letter from the Vange Action Group about these houses. As my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing, Urban Affairs and Construction said in reply to my hon. Friend on 27 March, at column 616, and as I said in the course of his Adjournment debate on 9 April, at column 324, we are carefully considering possible ways of dealing with this situation.

Local Authority Capital Receipts

40. Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest estimate of the total amount of money held by local authorities in capital receipts.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 6 February to the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) at column 249. It will shortly be possible to revise the estimate I gave then in the light of information currently being collected from local authorities on their accumulated capital receipts.

Rate Support Grant

44. Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria he used in deciding the level of rate support grant for Liverpool for 1986-87; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The amount of rate support grant payable to Liverpool city council in 1986-87 depends principally upon its budgeted total expenditure for the year as reported to my Department, and its GRE, the second highest per head amongst metropolitan district councils. The same criteria apply to every other local authority.

National Parks (Planning Restrictions)

45. Mr. Livsey asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on his Department's proposals for planning restrictions on farm buildings in national parks.

Mr. Tracey: My Department and the Welsh Office received a number of helpful responses, mainly from local authorities and from agricultural, forestry and conservation interests, to the consultation paper which we published last year. On 26 March this year we announced our intention to extend the landscape areas special development order to all national parks.

Superstore Developments

46. Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue fresh guidance on policy on planning applications in respect of superstore developments.

Mr. Tracey: No. My right hon. Friend sees no need to add to what the then Secretary of State said in his statement of 5 July 1985.

Central Council for Physical Recreation and Sports Council

47. Mr. Pendry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to meet the chairman of the Central Council for Physical Recreation and the Sports Council to discuss the future of those bodies in the light of the report of the Environment Committee (HC 241).

Mr. Tracey: My plans and proposals in the light of the Select Committee's recommendations will be set out in our formal response to the report.

Audit Commission

48. Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received on the working of the Audit Commission.

Mr. Waldegrave: The only recent representations have been about the audit consequences of late rate making by some local authorities. However, this is entirely a matter for the Audit Commission and its auditors, who are independent of central and local government.

Merseyside Residuary Body

50. Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the cost to public funds so far of the Merseyside Residuary Body; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: The cost of the Merseyside Residuary Body until 31 March was £106,000. This was funded from short-term borrowing, which will be financed within the Residuary Body's 1986-87 budget of £11 million.

SSSIs and Ancient Monuments

53. Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider seeking to integrate the provisions protecting sites of special scientific interest with the separate provisions protecting ancient monuments.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. The statutory provisions serve different purposes.

Housing (London and South-East)

54. Mr. Maples asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates are available to his Department of the current demand for housing in London and the south-east.

Sir George Young: The Department does not make estimates of housing demand, but it publishes information on recent trends in housing, and the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys does the same for population.

Local Authority Capital Expenditure

56. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many submissions were received by 14 April in response to the consultation document on the review of local authority capital expenditure controls.

Mrs. Rumbold: 210.

Arts and Voluntary Sector (Merseyside)

57. Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the consequences of the abolition of Merseyside county council for the arts and the voluntary sector in Merseyside.

Sir George Young: 266 representations have been received. Well over half of these related to the Philarmonic hall, which was transferred on 1 April to the Merseyside Residuary Body until final decisions are taken on its ownership and management.

Waste Disposal

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of incidents in each year since 1980 in which there has been evidence of re-emergence of contaminants, including the build-up of land-filled gases on former land-filled waste disposal sites and locations of previous industrial activity, together with information as to the usage of such redevelopment sites.

Mr. Waldegrave: There is no statutory requirement to notify this Department when such incidents occur, but its advice is sought from time to time by local authorities and others on the redevelopment of contaminated land. The advice in such cases is that a full chemical survey of the land should be made before plans for redevelopment are prepared, or remedial action is taken to overcome existing problems. Since 1980 we have given such advice on 39 such sites (none of them in Wales) where there had been a reported release of contaminants either by emissions of gas, leachate or materials breaking through the ground cover.

The breakdown by year is as follows:

	Number
1980	10
1981	5
1982	8
1983	5
1984	6
TOTAL	39

Only a small number of these were former landfills; the majority were industrial or other sites where reclamation work was, or had been, necessary to restore the land to use. In some cases the intention was only to make the sites safe, but in the majority of cases redevelopment of the site was intended.

Baguley Hall, Manchester

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is now in a position to make a statement about the future use of Baguley Hall in south Manchester, further to his letter to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, of 28 January and the letter to the right hon. Member from the chairman of English Heritage dated 25 March.

Mr. Tracey: A decision on the future of Baguley Hall is dependent upon further discussions between Manchester city council and the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission. I understand that the commission is awaiting confirmation of a date for a meeting.

Housing (Exchequer Payments)

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total sum received by local authorities from the Exchequer in the form of rate and rent rebates and housing benefit in the year 1979-80 and the last year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Rumbold: The total amounts of housing benefit received by English local authorities in 1979-80 and 1985-86 (the latest year for which information is available) are as follows:

	£ million
1979-80	533
1985-86	*3,755

* Provisional.

These amounts cover rent rebates, rent allowances and rate rebates and are derived from central records of payments made by DOE in respect of 1979-80 and by DHSS in respect of 1985-86.

The figures for 1979-80 and 1985-86 are not comparable. Since 1982-83, payments made to local authorities by DHSS have included amounts for rent and rate relief which would previously have been paid direct to individuals, particularly to supplementary benefit recipients.

Voluntary Bodies (London)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will direct the London Residuary Body to allocate funds, now available following the Law Lords' ruling, to the Richmond scheme;

(2) if he intends to advise the London Residuary body to allocate funds, now available following the Law Lords' ruling, to the 900 voluntary organisations in London which had expected to receive such funds from the Greater London council.

Mr. Tracey: My right hon. Friend will wish to consider the effects of the Law Lords ruling on the legality of GLC forward funding and of other similar proposals which are currently at issue. This will include consideration by the London Residuary Body of the estimated size of the GLC's closing balances. The provision of assistance for voluntary bodies in London is now primarily a matter for the London boroughs and the City of London to consider in the light of the resources which will be available to them.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to have set up the trust fund arising from the sale of Greater London council properties to fund voluntary groups in London.

Mr. Tracey: My right hon. Friend expects to begin consultation soon on a draft order under section 49 of the Local Government Act 1985 to provide a grant to the Trust for London. The timing of a grant to the trust will depend on the results of this consultation.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how long the preparation of the report on the "Assessment of Best Practicable Environmental Options for Management of Intermediate and Low-Level Solid Radioactive Wastes" took to complete; and what were the reasons for its publication at the present time.

Mrs. Rumbold: The study took about 15 months. The final report was published in March once we had held consultations on the draft.

Chair of State

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the Chair of State to be returned permanently to the Palace of Westminster; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 21 April 1986, c. 69.]: I understand that the Chair of State made for Prince Albert was recently purchased by the National Heritage Memorial Fund. The trustees of the fund intend to restore the chair with a view to its return to the Palace of Westminster.

SCOTLAND

Nurses

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many community psychiatric nurses were employed in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland as a whole in each of the past six years.

Mr. John MacKay: The statistical information is available for the years 1981 to 1985. The numbers of qualified nurses employed as community psychiatric nurses in Strathclyde and for Scotland for each year are set out in the table:

Year	Strathclyde	Scotland
1981	56	143
1982	68	166
1983	77	181
1984	102	223

Local Government Finance

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate, for each local authority in Scotland for the year 1985-86, the needs grant per adult and the safety net per adult that would apply under the proposals in "Paying for Local Government", Cmnd. 9714, stating the assumption as to the amount of standard grant per adult and the estimate as to the supplement to standard grant per adult from non-domestic rates used in the calculations.

Mr. Rifkind: I shall reply to the right hon. Member as soon as possible.

Health Boards (Staff)

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the number of unfilled notified vacancies in each of the health boards in Scotland as at 30 March.

Mr. John MacKay: The information requested is not available centrally.

DEFENCE

Exports (United States Controls)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on the acquisition for his Department's use of computers and equipment supplied by companies which seek to impose in the United Kingdom extraterritorial United States controls on their United Kingdom staff or on non-Government United Kingdom customers or on United Kingdom exports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have nothing to add to the answer which I gave the hon. Gentleman on 8 April, at column 102.

Privatisation

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many displaced staff at the Britannia Royal Naval college, Dartmouth, have been employed by private contractors who have taken on work formerly carried out by his Department.

Mr. Lee: Compass Services (UK) Ltd, Banda House, Cambridge Grove, London W6 0LE, which took over the catering task in BRNC Dartmouth on 16 April 1986, is currently working up to meet the full staff capacity required when the new term commences later this month. It is thus not possible to give an answer at this stage.

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement as to the global figure that his Department has saved in putting work out to private contract.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Savings amount to about £28 million a year.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions his Department has had with the authorities of the Federal Republic of Germany about the terms of the agreement entered into by both countries with the United States of America for strategic defence initiative research.

Mr. Norman Lamont: There have been some general exchanges, but none of detail, with officials of the Federal Republic of Germany about the respective agreements between the Government of that country and Her Majesty's Government with the United States Government for SDI research.

Small Arms Ammunition

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Defence what were the sizes, numbers and names of foreign manufacturers who supplied small arms ammunition to the United Kingdom in 1985-86.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In 1985-86 the Ministry of Defence purchased small arms ammunition from:

Size	Number Purchased by MOD (millions)	Manufacturers
·303 inch	1·0	Greek Powder & Cartridge Company
·50 inch	0·7	Greek Powder & Cartridge Company
5·56 mm	4·0	FN Herstal—Belgium
7·62 mm	2·2	FN Herstal—Belgium
7·62 mm	4·0	Metallwork Elisenhutte—FR Germany
7·62 mm	0·5	Dynamit Nobel—FR Germany
7·62 mm	33·0	INDEP—Portugal
7·62 mm	0·4	Dynamit Nobel—FR Germany
9.00 mm	14·0	FFV—Sweden
9.00 mm	0·2	Dynamit Nobel—FR Germany

NATIONAL FINANCE

Personal Incomes

Mr. Wigley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many persons currently earn (a) over £10,000 per annum, (b) over £15,000 per annum and (c) over £20,000 per annum; and what is the total tax take and aggregate net income after tax, respectively, for each of these groups.

Mr. Moore: I regret the delay in answering this question.

Provisional estimates, for taxpayers of working age, are shown in respect of gross income for tax purposes in 1985-86. Each married couple is treated as a unit with a combined income.

Range of gross income in 1985-86 £ per annum	Number of single people and married couples thousands*	Amount of gross income £ billion	Total income tax due £ billion	Total net income after tax £ billion
Over:
10,000	7,180 (3,180)	118·2	24·2	94·0
15,000	2,890 (1,610)	65·9	15·4	50·5
20,000	1,280 (700)	38·4	10·3	28·1

* The figure in brackets is the number of married couples where the wife has earned income above the wife's earned income allowance.

Income Tax

Mr. Penhaligon asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate his Department has made of the proportion of the individuals employed on rigs in the British sector of the North sea who pay United Kingdom income tax.

Mr. Moore: It is not possible to make a firm estimate but information available suggests that the overwhelming majority of employees in the United Kingdom sector of the North sea pay United Kingdom income tax.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will calculate the total amount of income tax reductions in money terms since 1979; and if he will present the distribution of income tax reductions in money terms since 1979; and if he will present the distribution of this total among the (a) top 1 per cent. of income earnings, (b) top 2 to 5 per cent. of income earnings, (c) top 6 to 10 per cent. of income earnings, (d) top 11 to 20 per cent. of income earnings, (e) top 21 to 30 per cent. of income earnings, (f) top 31 to 40 per cent. of income earnings, (g) top 41 to 50 per cent. of income earnings and (h) bottom 50 per cent.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 10 March 1986, c. 391]: The table shows the reductions in income tax liabilities at 1986-87 income levels of the proposed 1986-87 allowances, thresholds and rates compared with the 1978-79 regime indexed to 1986-87 levels by reference to the statutory formula. The comparisons therefore allow for budgetary changes in income tax rates and allowances, but not for any changes in the definition of the income tax base. As child tax allowances were being phased out in 1978-79 they have been excluded from the comparison.

*Points of income distribution in 1986-87 Per cent.	Reduction in income tax liability compared with 1978-79 indexed regime £ million
Top 1	1,670
Top 2 to 5	1,200
Top 6 to 10	790
Top 11 to 20	1,080
Top 21 to 30	820
Top 31 to 40	690
Top 41 to 50	580
Bottom 50	1,270
ALL	8,100

* By reference to the income for income tax purposes of those who would be liable to pay tax under the indexed 1978-79 regime.

Personal Taxation (Gains)

Mr. Meacher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the gain from all the measures contained in the Budget statements from 1979 to 1986, inclusive for the top 1 per cent., 5 per cent., 10 per cent., 20 per cent., 50 per cent., and the remaining 50 per cent. of the population; how many taxpayers are in each of these categories; and what has been the gain per taxpayer in each category.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 10 April 1986, c. 193]: Information is available in the form requested only for income tax changes. The table shows the reductions in income tax liabilities at 1986-87 income levels of the proposed 1986-87 allowances, thresholds and rates compared with the 1978-79 regime indexed to 1986-87 levels by reference to the statutory formula. The comparisons therefore allow for budgetary changes in income tax rates and allowances, but not for any changes in the definition of the income tax base. As child tax allowances were being phased out in 1978-79, they have been excluded from the comparison.

Benefits (Taxation)

Mr. Frank Field asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the annual revenue gained from taxing unemployment benefit and the relevant part of supplementary benefit paid to unemployment claimants for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. John Moore [pursuant to his reply, 21 April 1986, c. 38]: The revenue yield from taxing benefits paid to the unemployed in 1985-86 is estimated at approximately £600 million.

Acceptances in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Faulds asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will add to his answer to the hon. Member for Warley, East of 8 April, Official Report, column 101, further Treasury announcements in the Official Report of acceptances of items in lieu of tax which specify the individual amounts of tax satisfied; whether he will give a complete list, including those announcements already figuring in his answer of 8 April, covering the period from the answer of 4 November 1977, Official Report, column 3, to that of 30 April 1980, Official Report, columns 549-50, inclusive; and whether he will rectify his statement that a Treasury answer on this subject appeared in column 358 of the Official Report on Sunday 26 October 1980.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 21 April 1986, c. 37-38]: A further list is set out below.

I regret that the reference to 26 October 1980 was a printing error. The correct date (26 October 1979) will be shown in the Bound Volume.

ENERGY

Oil and Gas

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the relationship between the cost of natural gas in the United Kingdom and the price of oil; and if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the change in the price of gas to consumers since May 1979 compared with the rate of inflation.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: There is no simple relationship between the price of oil and the cost of gas to final consumers, since the cost to the BGC of buying gas is only partly indexed against oil and other factors, such as BGC wages, and so on, affect the delivered cost. The change in the price of gas to consumers since May 1979 compared with the rate of inflation is as follows:

Notes
In each series the gas price figures are the latest available.
The industrial price series is not available on a monthly basis.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will discuss with the chairman of British Gas the reason for the latest increases in gas prices to the consumer, in view of the considerable reduction in oil prices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: Gas prices are the responsibility of the British Gas Corporation. However, before making changes to tariffs it is obliged by statute to consult the National Gas Consumers Council. This it did recently. I have made a statement on the relationship between oil and gas prices in a separate answer today to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell).

Petrol and Derv

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Energy what steps his Department takes to monitor the prices for petrol and derv throughout the United Kingdom.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: My Department keeps in close touch with the oil companies about petrol and diesel fuel prices.

WALES

ADAS (Charges)

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from farmers in Wales about the proposed Agricultural and Development Advisory Service charges for statutory work in connection with milk and dairies regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: We have received a number of representations about the Government's decision to charge for statutory work under the milk and dairies regulations.

In deciding to introduce charges for this work, we were conscious of the fact that producers derive benefit from it. The high quality and reputation of our domestic milk production helps to maintain liquid consumption and this in turn benefits producer returns, which would certainly suffer if consumers had less confidence in the product.

Ritual Slaughter

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received from Wales in favour of stunning of animals prior to ritual slaughter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The Farm Animal Welfare Council's report on the welfare of livestock when slaughtered by religious methods included a recommendation that the slaughter of animals without pre-stunning should be prohibited within three years. The Department has received 77 representations from Wales in support of this recommendation. The report and all the comments made on it are presently under consideration.

HOME DEPARTMENT

"Easingwold Newsletter"

10. Dr. Blackburn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the first issue of the Easingwold Newsletter can be expected; and whether copies will be available in the Library.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We hope the first issue of a civil defence periodical will be available later this year. I shall be glad to arrange for copies to be placed in the Library.

Crime Prevention

11. Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any new proposals to fund crime prevention schemes.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Considerable central Government resources are already available, including about £18 million currently through the community programme for places devoted to crime prevention projects and £6·3 million through the urban programme during 1985. The Government will continue to direct public funds where they can be most effective.

16. Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he intends to take to assist and encourage local authorities, housing associations, and other public bodies to undertake measures to improve crime prevention for the public.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Measures are being developed on a number of fronts.

Five local demonstration projects with Home Office funded co-ordinators have been set up.

The Manpower Services Commission has allocated some £18,000,000, under the expanded community programme, for places devoted to crime prevention projects.

The Home Office crime prevention unit, in collaboration with the Society of Local Authority Chief Executives and the Association of Chief Police Officers, has recently issued to local authority chief executives examples of good local crime prevention practice.

Five working groups covering residential burglary, car security, shop theft, commercial robbery and the prevention of violence associated with licenced premises have been set up to report to the Home Office Standing Conference on Crime Prevention in November.

27. Mr. Ray Powell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further action he proposes to deal with the rising crime rate.

Mr. Mellor: We have before the House measures to deal with the growing menace of drugs and drug-related crime and to combat public disorder. The criminal justice White Paper published recently announced a number of proposals for changes in sentencing powers. We shall also continue to pursue vigorously our crime prevention measures which are beginning to show encouraging results. But the fight against crime requires the commitment of the whole community, not just the Government.

Crime Statistics

12. Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many victims of violent crime in the Metropolitan police district were women or children aged under 18 years in each of the years since 1977.

Mr. Mellor: The number of women and young persons under the age of 18 who were victims of offences of violence against the person, rape or robbery was approximately 12,800 in 1983, 13,800 in 1984 and 15,300 in 1985. Figures for earlier years could be provided only at disproportionate cost. I will, with permission, publish more detailed information for 1983-85 in the form of a table in the Official Report.

The detailed figures are as follows:

Victims of offences recorded in the Metropolitan Police District

		Women aged 18 or over*	Children under 18
Violence against the person	1983	3,651	2,889
	1984	3,960	3,034
	1985	4,264	3,282

		Women* aged 18 or over	Children under 18
Rape	1983	249	68
	1984	294	71
	1985	441	129
Roberry	1983	3,604	2,292
	1984	4,212	2,266
	1985	5,022	2,201

* Includes females of unrecorded age.

22. Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the information available to his Department indicates the extent to which (a) poor street lighting, (b) vandalised or derelict property, (c) absence of caretakers, park keepers and similar staff, (d) absence of public transport and (e) lack of a telephone are factors contributing to the incidence of crime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Research, much of which has been undertaken or commissioned by the Home Office, and experience suggest that each of the factors listed by the hon. Member may have some effect on the incidence of crime in specific localities or at particular times of day. There is, however, no information available nationally to indicate the extent of their contribution to crime levels.

26. Mr. Clelland asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the percentage increase in the number of young people aged under 21 years (a) cautioned for and (b) found guilty of indictable offences, respectively, between '979 and 1984.

Mr. Mellor: The increase was 24 per cent. for those cautioned and 5 per cent. for those found guilty.

46. Mr. James Lamond asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the clear-up rate for all crimes in England and Wales in each of the last seven years.

Mr. Mellor: Clear-up rates for notifiable offences recorded by the police are published each year in chapter 2 of the Command Paper "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" (table 2.17 of the issue for 1984, Cmnd. 9621) and most recently in a Home Office statistical bulletin (table 5 of issue No. 4/86).

63. Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the increase since 1978 in the total number of crimes of violence against the person committed in the Metropolitan police district for the most recently available year.

Mr. Mellor: Police recorded 20,200 offences of violence against the person in the Metropolitan police district in 1985—6,000 more than the corresponding figure for 1978. Numbers of offences recorded in the Metropolitan police district are published annually by type of offence in the report of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis and in Home Office statistical bulletins (table 6 of issue No. 4/86).

Police (Complaints)

14. Mr. Dormand asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of appeals following complaints against the police have been upheld by the Police Complaints Authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Police Complaints Authority's functions are to supervise the investigation of serious complaints against the police and to examine proposals by police forces in respect of disciplinary proceedings against police officers following complaints investigations. The authority has no appellate function. The authority's first annual report covering the period from its establishment on 29 April to the end of 1985 was published on 22 April.

Data Banks

15. Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation allowing individuals access to records concerning themselves held in data banks belonging to Government agencies.

Mr. Waddington: When the Data Protection Act 1984 comes fully into force in November 1987 individuals will have the right of access, within the terms of the Act, to data about themselves which are held by Government agencies.

Drug Offences

18. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of drug offences notified to the Metropolitan police in 1978 and in the most recently available year.

Mr. Mellor: The available information relates to persons found guilty of or cautioned for offences involving controlled drugs. The total numbers found guilty or cautioned for such offences in the Metropolitan police district, including the City of London, in 1978 and 1984 were 4,121 and 8,722 respectively.

Public Order

23. Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he plans to make any changes in his policy towards the police and public order, in the light of the report entitled "The Effect of the Policing of the News International Dispute on Wapping Residents", published by the National Council for Civil Liberties, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No. The residents of Wapping have undoubtedly suffered considerable inconvenience as a result of the industrial dispute at the News International plant. The marches and demonstrations have caused particular difficulty on Saturday evenings. The Commissioner very much regrets that police action in checking those seeking access to some streets has caused inconvenience and delay to residents, but he is satisfied that this is necessary in order to limit and contain the public order problems associated with the dispute.

Police (Firearms)

24. Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions firearms were issued to police officers in England and Wales in 1985; and what were the comparable figures in the two previous years.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The available records show that the number of operations involving persons known or believed to be armed in which firearms were issued to police officers in England and Wales was 3,180 in 1983, 2,667 in 1984 and 2,488 in 1985.

32. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in 1985 firearms were fired by police officers during the course of operations.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The available records show that firearms were discharged on seven occasions by police officers during the course of operations in 1985. A total of 13 shots were fired.

Sunday Trading

25. Mr. Penhaligon asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received to date against the repeal of the Sunday trading laws.

54. Mr. Livsey asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received to date against the repeal of the Sunday trading laws.

Mr. Waddington: Since the debate on the Auld report in the House of Commons in May last year, we have received 22,667 representations in favour of our proposals and 48,904 representations against.

Police (Training)

28. Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what additional resources he plans to make available for police training in the powers being conferred upon them by public order legislation.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given earlier today to a question from the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd).

West Yorkshire Police Authority

29. Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received concerning the funding of the West Yorkshire police authority.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I attended a meeting on 26 February between my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment and representatives of the West Yorkshire police authority about the authority's funding. The representatives' primary concern was the authority's grant-related expenditure assessment, which is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. We have received no representations since that meeting.

After-care Hostels

30. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the 1985-86 cost to his Department of grant-aid to voluntary after-care hostels for offenders.

Mr. Mellor: £4,422,288.

Prison Service

31. Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he intends to improve morale in the prison service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We shall continue to pursue the strategy of improvement in the prison estate, in working practices in the prison service, and in related aspects of the criminal justice system which my right hon. Friend set out in his address to the prison governors' conference in November last year.

Civil Defence

33. Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met representatives of local authorities regarding emergency control centres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: As I said in reply to a question from the hon. Member for Carmarthen (Dr. Thomas) on 14 April at column 231, I met members of Carmarthen district council on 3 March to discuss this subject in relation to an emergency centre at Carmarthen.

35. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what mechanisms he has developed for the deployment of civil defence volunteers in an emergency.

48. Sir Kenneth Lewis asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what mechanisms he has developed for the deployment of civil defence volunteers in an emergency.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The deployment of volunteers in an emergency would be for local authorities to determine. Advice is given in the emergency planning guidance to local authorities.

56. Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to change the term civil defence, as used by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Wansdyke (Mr. Aspinwall).

Crossbows

34. Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is yet in a position to announce his conclusions on the adequacy of the regulations governing the sale and control of crossbows; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is yet in a position to say whether he has any plans to introduce legislation to control the sale of crossbows; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I am currently considering whether any steps could usefully be taken to try to prevent crossbows falling into the wrong hands. Discussions with interested parties including crossbow sporting organisations, the manufacturers and the police are taking place. My right hon. Friend will report our conclusions to the House as soon as possible.

40. Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received concerning the danger arising from the unrestricted sale and possession of crossbows.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Since the beginning of this year, we have received 76 letters from right hon. and hon. Members and 45 from organisations and members of the public. Among these were representations from the Association of County Councils, the Association of District Councils, Suffolk county council, the Northumbria police authority, the National Farmers' Union, the British Veterinary Association and the National Housewives Association.

Community Relations Councils

36. Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the current operations of community relations councils.

Mr. Waddington: Community relations councils engage in a wide variety of activity, but a convenient summary description of this under four main heads can be found in chapter 10 of the most recent (1984) annual report of the Commission for Racial Equality. I understand that, following consultation with the National Council of Community Relations Councils, the CRE has recently decided to commission a research project which will examine the different ways in which community relations councils currently operate and make recommendations with a view to improving the effectiveness of "race relations" work at a local level. The research will be undertaken by the Policies Studies Institute and its findings will be made public.

Metropolitan Police

37. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review disciplinary procedures within the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No. The police disciplinary arrangements, including the procedures specifically within the Metropolitan police, were revised when the Police (Discipline) Regulations 1985 came into operation on 29 April 1985.

Prisons (Overcrowding)

38. Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he proposes to relieve the overcrowding in Her Majesty's prisons.

Mr. Mellor: We have taken vigorous steps to cope with the rising population by acceleration of the building programme by re-occupying disused accommodation and by altering functions of establishments so as to make more intensive use of the prison estate. We are also continuing to encourage the use of non-custodial sentences whenever this is right.

The present unsatisfactory conditions in some of our prisons results from years of neglect and will not be remedied quickly. It was for this reason that in 1979 the Government embarked on the major building programme that is currently under way. This programme includes a total of 18 purpose-built new prisons which will provide some 8,000 additional places by the early 1990s. Three of these prisons have already been completed, five are currently under construction and the remainder are at various stages of planning and design. Apart from the new prisons, there are some 25 major capital projects at existing establishments and also many other smaller schemes. These projects will provide 5,500 or so places over the next few years. In addition, a former RAF camp at Lindholme near Doncaster has been acquired and converted for prison purposes and a prison previously not in use has been re-opened, providing a further 900 places early in 1986. The building programme will gradually improve conditions and bring us nearer to ending overcrowding.

Thames Valley Police Force

39. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received concerning his promised autumn review of manning levels in the Thames Valley police force.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Several of my hon. Friends have expressed support for a further increase in the authorised establishment of the Thames Valley Police. My right hon. Friend will take account of their views when he considers in the autumn the possibility of a further increase for Thames Valley; 370 additional police posts have already been approved for the force since May 1979.

Terrorism (Toxic Chemicals)

41. Mr. Neil Thorne asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what detection equipment will be available to police and fire services and local authorities to monitor the presence of toxic chemicals in the event of terrorist use of chemical weapons or materials.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given today to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker).

Weapons (Ownership)

42. Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the scope and operation of the law in relation to the ownership of weapons in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Firearms Act 1968, which lays down strict controls over the possession and use of firearms in Great Britain, is kept under constant review but we have no plans at present to amend the Act. Separate stricter legislation exists in Northern Ireland and I understand that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland also has no plans to introduce amending legislation.

Prisoners (Serious Offences)

43. Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he intends to make any changes in the treatment of prisoners charged with serious offences.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. Friend has no plans for any changes at present.

Victim Support Schemes

44. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what response he is now giving to requests for increased funding from his Department for local victim support schemes.

Mr. Mellor: I generally refer to my right hon. Friend's decision to provide £136,000 during 1986-87 to assist local schemes in financial difficulties, and to the various other central Government programmes under which local victim support schemes may be able to obtain funding. In 1984-85, 66 schemes received grants amounting in total to some £580,000 from central Government sources, including the urban programme administered by the Department of the Environment and Manpower Services Commission voluntary projects and community programmes. But I also point out that the Government should not be expected to undertake general responsibility for the running costs of the schemes which, as locally based voluntary groups, should be able to look to the communities which they serve as their main sources of funds.

Police Stations (Lay Visitors)

45. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the development of lay visitor schemes at police stations.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Halifax (Mr. Galley) on 26 February at columns 569-70.

News International (Dispute)

47. Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police are currently required on an average Saturday night to police the News International dispute at Wapping.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The number of officers deployed on each Saturday evening since the dispute began was as follows:

	Number
25 January 1986	281
1 February 1986	233
8 February 1986	268
15 February 1986	1,009
22 February 1986	1,102
1 March 1986	1,098
8 March 1986	1,751
15 March 1986	878
22 March 1986	1,380
29 March 1986	910
5 April 1986	1,293
12 April 1986	1,050
19 April 1986	1,050

Breath Analysers

49. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied with the operation and effectiveness of the Intoximeter and Camic breath analysers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Home Office forensic science report on the evidential breath testing machines, published on 25 June 1985, demonstrated both instruments to be fundamentally acceptable in the sense that they do not place subjects unjustly in jeopardy. Work on the modifications to the machines arising from the report's recommendations is continuing.

Remanded Persons

50. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he proposes to introduce limitations on the time spent on remand in custody awaiting trial.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Stockport (Mr. Favell) on 8 April at column 7.

Prison Department

51. Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied with the current operation of the prison department.

Mr. Mellor: Yes, but I support management's drive for improved working practices in prisons.

Police-Community Relations

52. Mr. William Powell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the contribution which the tape-recording of interviews by the police can make to improving police-community relations.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The fact that an interview is tape-recorded serves both as an additional stimulus to the interviewing officer to conduct it in a proper and effective manner, and as a safeguard against allegations that evidence has been obtained by improper means or has been falsified. Tape recording can thereby make a significant contribution both to police effectiveness and to improving relations between the police and the community they serve.

62. Mr. Maples asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures have been taken by the Government and police forces in England and Wales to strengthen relations between the police and the community since the Scarman Report.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The police in England and Wales have made great efforts to review and, as necessary, to adapt their procedures and approach in the light of Lord Scarman's recommendations. This has included a growing emphasis on community policing and the increased use of foot patrols. Most police forces have specifically designated community constables working under the guidance of a specialist community liaison department. Improved training at all levels in community and race relations aspects of policing skills has been introduced and strenuous efforts are being made to recruit more police officers from the minority communities.

The thrust of Government policy has been to encourage these initiatives, and to develop policies designed to enhance public confidence in the police. A major objective of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 was, while providing the police with the powers they need to deal with crime, to ensure the open and accountable use of powers. The new independent Police Complaints Authority has been set up to provide reassurance that complaints against the police will be handled rigorously and impartially. The development of local consultative arrangements, for which the 1984 Act also provides, is making an important further contribution to the objective of developing public trust; in common with crime prevention initiatives like neighbourhood watch, such arrangements enable the police to be more responsive to the community's needs.

The way suspects are treated within the police station is an issue which can have a significant impact upon general public perceptions of the police: in addition to the safeguards for suspects contained in the codes of practice made under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act, therefore, the Government are encouraging the development of schemes for the tape recording of police interviews, and the establishment of panels of lay visitors who can see for themselves how suspects are treated.

Chief officers of police continue to be firmly committed to strengthening relations with the communities they serve and in this endeavour they have my fullest support.

Police (Pensions)

53. Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he intends to take to publicise to individual police forces the effects of the provisions of the Social Security Bill, in so far as they may remove from police officers the threat of deprivation of pension in any disciplinary proceedings.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Guidance will be issued after the Bill is enacted.

Overseas Visitors

55. Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied with the arrangements for monitoring the departure of visitors to the United Kingdom at the conclusion of their permitted stay.

Mr. Waddington: The current computerised monitoring arrangements make for the most efficient and effective use of the Department's resources. Possible further uses of new technology in the immigration control are being examined as part of the computing strategy of the immigration and nationality department.

Private Land (Trespass)

57. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received about the problem of mass trespass by itinerants on private land.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Representations have been made by a number of right hon. and hon. Members, the Association of County Councils, the Country Landowners Association, the National Farmers Union, the Central Council of Physical Recreation and the Council for the Protection of Rural England.

Prison Officers Association

58. Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next expects to meet the Prison Officers Association.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. Friend met the Prison Officers Association to discuss the current dispute on Monday, 21 April. We have no further plans, at present, to meet it again.

Television (Violence)

59. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, when he next meets the chairman of the BBC he will raise the subject of violence on television.

Mr. Giles Shaw: This is one of the subjects which is likely to be discussed.

Prison Population

60. Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of the present prison population comprises persons awaiting trial.

Mr. Mellor: On 31 March 1986, about 17 per cent. of the total population of prison department establishments in England and Wales was untried. Information on the number awaiting commencement of their trial is not available centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

National Marriage Guidance Council

61. Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the objectives served by his Department's funding for the National Marriage Guidance Council.

Mr. Mellor: The Home Office grant to the National Marriage Guidance Council is intended to assist the council in its selection and training of new counsellors, and in the provision of continuing support and in-service training to existing counsellors.

Remands

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time spent on remand in remand centres awaiting trial.

Mr. Mellor: Information is not available on the average time spent on remand in different types of establishment. The information available centrally relates to the average time spent on remand in custody by all untried prisoners and is published annually in "Prison Statistics, England and Wales" (table 2(g) of the latest issue for 1984, Cmnd. 9622). Provisional estimates for 1985 were given in "The prison population in 1985" (paragraph 8 of Home Office statistical bulletin 7/86).

Entry Refusal Statistics

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of persons who were refused entry into the United Kingdom and detained in each month over the past year; and if he will identify them by country of origin.

Mr. Waddington: The following tables give the information available on the number of occasions on which passengers were taken by the immigration authorities to approved detention accommodation in each month in the year ending February 1986. They are based on returns from all ports of entry, plus returns from the detention facilities at Harmondsworth and Heathrow queens building. Passengers who were taken to different buildings at different times may have been counted more than once. These figures include passengers required to submit to further examination and cannot be broken down to identify those passengers refused entry into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons and from which countries are currently being detained after entry refusal into the United Kingdom; and how long each of them has been detained.

Mr. Waddington: The information available is given in the table and relates to those passengers refused entry and detained under Immigration Act powers, other than in the control areas at ports, at 3 pm on 22 April 1986.

Of the six persons detained for more than 60 days one (Turk) has been detained for 106 days, one (Sri Lankan) for 93 days, one (Sri Lankan) for 86 days, one (Sri Lankan) for 79 days, one (Iranian) for 136 days and one (Moroccan) for 171 days.

Visitors (Representatives)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations on behalf of visitors to the United Kingdom have been made to his office by hon. Members in each year since 1979; and what has been the number of staff employed in the relevant Minister's Office for each of the same years.

Mr. Waddington: The available information relates to the number of immigration files* created following representations by right hon. and hon. Members, and is as follows:

	Number
1979	10,395
1980	10,029
1981	8,945
1982	9,931
1983	11,456
1984	13,164
1985	16,024
†1986	4,398

† To 31 March.

The figures include representations on all categories of after entry cases as well as those arising at the ports. Not all the representations concerned visitors.

The great majority of representations were handled through my office, and that of my predecessor. The number of staff in post in that office in each year since 1979 was

	Number
1979	6
1980-85	7
1986	8

Two additional officers will join the staff of my office very shortly.

* Notes:

1. These figures include a small number of letters dealing with general immigration issues rather than individual cases.
2. Representations made on behalf of a single family may be counted as more than one case where the immigration circumstances of more than one member of the family are under consideration.
3. Further representations made after a reply has been sent are included separately in these figures.
4. Representations received about the same case from more than one right hon. or hon. Member are counted separately.

Police Complaints Authority

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to obtain copies of all past and future reports of the Police Complaints Authority, with a view to placing them in the Library.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. Friend is required by section 97 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 to lay before Parliament the Police Complaints Authority's annual reports and any special reports the authority may make on matters arising out of the exercise of its responsibilities. The chairman of the authority has, in addition, agreed to provide him with a copy of any statement it might publish summarising the results of the investigation of a particular case, so that a copy may be placed in the Library. Only one such summary has so far been published. It was concerned with the circumstances surrounding the death of Mrs Cynthia Jarrett on 5 October 1985. A copy is now in the Library.

Public Assemblies (Control)

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to ensure that the police have power to control public assemblies on both public and private land, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Clause 14 of the Public Order Bill seeks to give the police power, in certain circumstances, to impose conditions on those organising or participating in a public assembly in a public place. In the committee proceedings [Official Report, Standing Committee G, 11 and 13 March 1986], we undertook to consider further whether any change in the law was required in respect of assemblies on private land. Discussions with the police and others are continuing but, as my right hon. Friend indicated in Standing Committee, it would be wrong to rush into legislation on what is a difficult and sensitive issue. We cannot yet give any indication of when conclusions are likely to be reached.

Data Protection Act 1984

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will undertake a review of the operation of the Data Protection Act 1984 with specific reference to the consistency with which the data protection registrar applies the criteria for registration; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: No. Reponsibility for the implementation of the registration requirements of the Act lies with the registrar and, in certain respects, the Data Protection Tribunal. The registrar will be reporting to Parliament regularly on the effects of the Act and will be keeping its requirements under constant review.

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek powers to direct the priorities of the data protection registrar in establishing the data protection register; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: No. The Act clearly places responsibility for these matters on the registrar.

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what control his Department exercises over the public expressions of opinions, activities and expenditure of the data protection registrar.

Mr. Waddington: The status of the registrar and the position of his officers and servants is set out in part I of schedule 2 to the Data Protection Act 1984. Paragraph 6(2) of the schedule provides for the payment of his expenses by the Secretary of State with the approval of the Treasury and his activities are governed by various provisions of the Act. My right hon. Friend does not exercise control over public expressions of opinion by the registrar.

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to ensure that no one other than users of computers and computer service bureaux, is required to register under the Data Protection Act 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: We have no plans at present for further legislation in this field. If my hon. Friend has in mind any particular problems relating to registration under the Act, he may wish to take them up with the Data Protection Registrar.

Wormwood Scrubs

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department for how long it is anticipated that part of the prison hospital at Wormwood Scrubs is to be used as office accommodation; why it is being so used; and if he will make a statement on the progress of the modernisation of the hospital and operating theatre at the prison indicating when the modernisation is expected to be completed, the estimated total cost and when the operating theatre will be reopened.

Mr. Mellor: Neither the old hospital, which was taken out of use prior to the redevelopment of Wormwood Scrubs, nor the existing temporary hospital, is being used as office accommodation. As part of the redevelopment, we propose to provide a permanent hospital and operating theatre within a new building linking the four existing wings of the prison. Subject to the necessary financial and planning procedures, it is hoped that work on this new building will begin in 1988 and be completed in 1991. The total cost of the building is estimated at £21·8 million, but because this unit will contain a number of different facilities, it is not possible at this stage to provide an accurate breakdown of the cost of the hospital and operating theatre alone.

Walton Prison, Liverpool

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the operating theatre at Her Majesty's prison, Walton, Liverpool, has yet been reopened; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The surgical unit at Liverpool was reopened on 7 April after the completion of essential repairs and refurbishment.

Driving Licences

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offences have been recorded and how many convictions have been recorded for (a) misusing and (b) theft of driving licences; and if he will provide figures for each of the past five years and publish them in the Official Report.

Mr. Mellor: Information in the form requested is not available. "Misuse" of a driving licence covers a wide variety of separate offences and the available information relates only to proceedings and findings of guilt for these offences, figures for which are published annually in "Offences Relating to Motor Vehicles, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables" (table 5 of the issue for 1984). Information on thefts of driving licences is not separately available.

Interpol

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to inform Parliament as soon as any application is made by the Soviet Union to join Interpol; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: In practice an application by the Soviet Union to join Interpol is likely to become public knowledge. The formal position, however, is that application for membership is made to the Secretary-General of the organisation who is, in the first instance, responsible for any decision as regards publication. The Secretary-General also notifies member countries prior to the Interpol General Assembly of any applications for membership, although this would not necessarily be immediately the application was made.

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what access by foreign police forces to information in Scotland Yard files and the police national computer admission to Interpol permits; if there is a common basis for disclosure to any Interpol member requesting information; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Foreign police forces have no direct access through Interpol to information held by the police in the United Kingdom. The Interpol constitution provides that co-operation between member countries must be compatible with the legislation of their respective countries; all requests for assistance of the United Kingdom are made through the National Central Bureau which will supply information only if it is legally permissible and compatible with the United Kingdom interest to do so.

Immigration (Representations)

Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to introduce the new arrangements for dealing with representations from right hon. and hon. Members in immigration cases.

Mr. Hurd: I can confirm that the new arrangements will be introduced on 1 May. My hon. and learned Friend is writing to all right hon. and hon. Members enclosing a copy of the guidelines, which were debated in the House on 26 March. I am placing a copy in the Library.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Archer asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will publish in full the table from the "Supplementary Benefit Statistical Enquiry (1983)" for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: Tables containing data from the 1983 inquiry are to be found in section 20 of "Northern Ireland Social Security Statistics 1984", a copy of which is in the Library.

RUC (Moving Homes)

Mr. J. Enoch Powell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to how many members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary assistance in moving their homes has been given in each of the last five calendar years and in 1986 to date.

Mr. Scott: Information is not readily available prior to 1983 and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The following figures cover members who have been given assistance in moving their homes.

Community Groups (Grant Aid)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Departments of Education (Northern Ireland) will use the powers in the Northern Ireland Youth Services Order 1975 to pay grant aid directly to community groups normally grant-aided by district councils; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have no plans to use powers to make grant payments direct to community groups. District councils are best placed to take decisions on the needs of these groups. I regret that Belfast city council has recently failed to fulfil its responsibilities to its community groups. The Government have, however, taken special action to ensure the payment of grants in Belfast and will be keeping the position in this and other district council areas under review.

Auxiliary Oil Replenishment Vessel

Mr. Hayes asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he has taken to ensure equitable competition between Harland and Wolff and shipbuilding yards in the private sector in the contest for the auxiliary oiler replenishment vessel.

Mr. Tom King: The Government required that Harland and Wolff's tender should be unsubsidised and comprehensively costed. Harland and Wolff's tender met that requirement. This has been confirmed by an independent and internationally respected management consultancy which reviewed Harland and Wolff's bid.

While the Government are satisfied that Harland and Wolff's bid is free of subsidy and comprehensively costed we intend in addition to put the company on a similar footing to a private sector company. In placing the AOR order with Harland and Wolff Ministers have specified that Harland and Wolff's performance and costs in building the AOR will be subject to a stringent system of actual financial and performance controls monitored by independent assessors. Under this:

(1) If Harland and Wolff incurs higher costs than expected in building the vessel, the extent of the overrun will be netted directly and automatically off subsidy available for merchant shipbuilding with a direct effect on the company's ability to secure further work in the yard;

(2) If in addition those higher costs exceed 5 per cent., then Harland and Wolff will not be permitted to bid for Ministry of Defence contracts until it brings its costs again below that margin.

(3) Should extra costs exceed 10 per cent. there will be an immediate review, by Ministers, of both alternative arrangements for completing the AOR contract and of the future of Harland and Wolff itself.

Marches

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list, by location, those parades in Northern Ireland during the Easter adjournment which (a) took place in contravention of a ban and (b) took place without the necessary statutory notice being served on the police; at which of these parades firearms were seen to be in the possession of civilians; how many plastic bullets were fired by the Royal Ulster Constabulary at each of these parades; and if he will identify which of these parades were Loyalist and which Republican.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 14 April 1986, c. 243]: During the Easter adjournment (27 March to 8 April) one Loyalist parade took place in Portadown in the early hours of 31 March in contravention of a prohibition under article 4(3) of the Public Order (Northern Ireland) Order 1981. Later in the day a number of minor Loyalist parades took place in contravention of the same prohibition. One other Loyalist parade was deemed in contravention of the law when it deviated from its customary route in Belfast.

Four Republican parades, two in Londonderry and two in Belfast, took place without the required statutory notice being given to the police.

The Royal Ulster Constabulary did not fire baton rounds at any of these parades, however, in violent incidents which occurred in the vicinity of the Portadown parades, and in rioting which followed them in the town, a total of 193 plastic baton rounds was fired by the police. On one occasion, at a Republican parade in Londonderry, firearms were observed in the possession of civilians.

Noraid

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he or Ministers in his Department have, on visits to the United States of America, made representations to the United States Government to take legal or legislative steps against the Noraid organisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: I shall reply to the right hon. Member as soon as possible.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Expenditure

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish a table in the Official Report showing the total amount spent directly and indirectly on British agriculture directly by the United Kingdom Government and indirectly under the common agricultural policy in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Jopling: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Intervention Stores (London)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the location of each intervention store in the Greater London area; and what are the amounts stored.

Mr. Jopling: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Members' Travelling Expenses

Mr. Straw asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will publish in the Official Report tables showing the total cost of travel between Westminster and the constituencies of right hon. and hon. Members, for the latest available financial year, 1982-83 and 1979-80, with separate details relating to mode of travel, namely, car, train, plane, etc.

Mr. Biffen: This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

EMPLOYMENT

Training and Skill Shortages

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General what recent representations he has received about training and skill shortages in British industry.

Mr. Trippier: I have not received any direct representations about training and skill shortages in British industry.

Current information on skill shortages indicates that overall there is no shortfall of skilled workers, although there are shortages of workers with particular skills, especially those associated with the application of new technology.

However, the Government are very concerned that in the long term shortages of skills do not become a barrier to increased output and to individuals' work opportunities, so that positive action is being taken to help to alleviate them. A number of the Manpower Services Commission's adult training schemes are designed to address immediate skill needs by focusing directly on the needs of local employers, as well as action to increase the supply of skills in the longer term through two year YTS, the non advanced further education initiative and other adult training policies.

Nevertheless the Government remain convinced that training to meet skill needs is primarily the responsibility of industry itself an consistently urges employers to see that training is an investment rather than an overhead.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the European Economic Community countries, the numbers employed in manufacturing industry in 1968, 1973, 1979 and at the latest available date in each case, together with the numbers unemployed.

Mr. Lang: The available information is given in the following table.

*European Community Countries

Restart Programme

Mr. Rowe asked the Paymaster General what proportion of the long-term unemployed he expects to take up a place on a training course under the restart programme; how long on average such a course will last; and how much is the average cost of such a course.

Mr. Lang: Of those interviewed 20-30 per cent. are expected to take up a place on the new restart course. The average length of such a course is one week with a further drop-in facility of one day per week for up to 13 weeks thereafter. The average cost per trainee week is £62 and £14 per trainee day for the drop-in facility.

Employment Committee (Report)

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Paymaster General whether he will make available the Government's response to the report of the Employment Committee on special employment measures and the long-term unemployed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am making the Government's memorandum publicly available today and I have arranged to put copies in the Library.

Data Protection Agency (Advertisements)

Mr. Grylls asked the Paymaster General what assessment he has made of the effect on small businesses of the current advertisements being run by the Data Protection Agency.

Mr. Waddington: I have been asked to reply.

The objective of the registrar's advertisements is to encourage computer users to consider their position under the Data Protection Act 1984 and, if necessary, register under the Act. It is too early to assess the effect of this advertising campaign on small businesses.

PRIME MINISTER

Strategic Defence Initiative

Q19. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if, in view of the letter to vice-chancellors from Mr. G. Gallagher-Daggitt sent on 27 February, she will make a statement on co-ordination between the Department of Education and Science and the Ministry of Defence on the strategic defence initiative research.

The Prime Minister: I am fully satisfied with the arrangements for such co-ordination.

Caernarfon

Q37. Mr. Wigley asked the Prime Minister when she next intends to pay an official visit to Caernarfon.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Libya (United States Raid)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister whether she will ask the United States Government to release the pictures taken from United States planes which bombed Government targets in Libya.

The Prime Minister: I understand that some such material has already been released.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister what is the number of (a) messages of support and (b) expressions of opposition received at 10 Downing street in connection with the use of British bases for the United States attack on Libya.

The Prime Minister: Up to and including Wednesday 23 April the Government have received about 10,920 representations against, and about 3,780 representations for the United Kingdom's support of the United States action.

Heavy Vehicle Manufacture

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked th Prime Minister what assessment she has made of the adequacy of present and prospective arrangements for heavy vehicle manufacture in the United Kingdom in relation to the United Kingdom's defence requirements in a conventional war.

The Prime Minister: The position is continuously monitored. At present and for the foreseeable future there is more than enough heavy vehicle manufacturing capacity in the United Kingdom to meet defence requirements.

British Transport Police

Dr. Hampson asked the Prime Minister what are the responsibilities of the Secretary of State for Transport in respect of the British Transport police.

The Prime Minister: The British Transport police are appointed and employed by the British Railways Board. They have similar powers and duties to local forces, but in relation to railway premises and property. Their operations are the responsibility of the chief constable, who reports to the British Transport police committee. The force and the committee were established and are governed by statutory provisions. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State thus has no direct responsibilities in respect of this force.

Railways (Policing)

Dr. Hampson asked the Prime Minister if she is satisfied with co-ordination between the Home Department, the Scottish Office and the Department of Transport with regard to policing of railways, and, in particular, the control of travelling football supporters.

The Prime Minister: Yes.

Shops Bill [Lords]

Mr. Kaufman asked the Prime Minister whether she intends to take any action concerning the continued membership of her Administration of the hon. Member for Peterborough (Dr. Mawhinney), the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, following his decision not to vote on the Second Reading of the Shops Bill.

The Prime Minister: The right hon. Member's question is based on a false premise.

Terrorism

Mr. Hickmet asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement about deaths and injuries in terrorist incidents caused by the Provisional IRA, the IRA and similar organisations in mainland Britain since the recent troubles began, giving the date and place of each incident with the numbers of men, women and children killed or injured in each incident and in total to date; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The information is not available in the form requested, but deaths in England and Wales recorded in the criminal statistics as attributable to terrorist incidents connected with Northern Ireland, and injuries known to the Metropolitan police were as follows:

1972	7	2	5	—	1	*n.a.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement about deaths and injuries in terrorist incidents caused by the Provisional IRA, the IRA and similar organisatons in Northern Ireland since the recent troubles began, giving the date and place of each incident with the numbers of men, women and children killed or injured in each incident and in total to date; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The number of deaths and injuries between 1969 and 1985 as a result of the security situation in Northern Ireland is in the table. Information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Prime Minister, how many persons injured in terrorist outrages she has visited since May 1979 giving the date and place of each visit and identifying the incident in which such persons were injured.

The Prime Minister: It is not possible to state with any precision every occasion on which I have met people injured in terrorist attacks. However, I have visited in hospital victims of the following terrorist incidents:

October 1981—Chelsea Barracks bomb
July 1982—Hyde Park and Regent's Park bombs
December 1983—Harrods bomb
October 1984—Grand Hotel, Brighton bomb

In addition, on two occasions when I have visited Northern Ireland (August 1979 and December 1982) I have met victims of terrorist attacks.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Prime Minister how many letters she has written to those injured and to the dependents of those killed or injured in terrorist incidents since May 1979.

The Prime Minister: I regret to say that it would be very difficult to identify such correspondence from the records. I share this sensitive duty with my colleagues.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement about the Prevention of Terrorism Act and its role in combating terrorism.

The Prime Minister: The prevention of terrorism legislation, which was first introduced by a Labour Government in 1974, is of very great importance in combating terrorism, and the Government believe that this legislation will be necessary as long as a substantial terrorist threat remains. It cannot prevent all terrorism, but there is good reason to believe that there would have been more terrorist attacks, and that more would have been successful, without it. A large quantity of explosives was discovered after the Act's use on one occasion last year. Also last year, the power to arrest without warrant under this legislation was used to avert a conspiracy to attack a retired army officer who had served in Northern Ireland. Since 1974, 366 persons detained under this legislation have been convicted of offences, and 308 have been excluded from Great Britain or the United Kingdom, or have been deported or removed under immigration powers. Six persons detained under the Act received life sentences for murder or attempted murder, and 36 received sentences of more than five years' imprisonment for causing or conspiring to cause explosions. Twenty persons were convicted for possession of explosives and 33 for offences under the Firearms Act. The case for continuing the legislation is considered every year and the professional judgment of the police on each occasion has been that the Act helps to prevent and detect acts of terrorism.

Libya

Mr. Hickmet asked the Prime Minister what information she has as to assistance the Libyan Government have given to the IRA and similar organisations since 1970 in the training of terrorists, the supply of arms and the supply of money; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Mason asked the Prime Minister if she will publish the available information showing that the Libyan Government have supported the Provisional Irish Republican Army in the training of personnel, financial assistance and the supply of arms; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Libyan support for the provisional IRA is beyond doubt. A paper on this subject was placed in the Library of the House in 1984; a revised paper is being prepared at present and will be placed in the Library as soon as possible.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Prime Minister (1) in what terrorist incidents or murders on mainland Britain the Libyan Government have been implicated since President Gaddafi came to power, giving details of all those killed or injured and property damaged with the date and place; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what information she has as to the incidence of terrorism sponsored by Libya in Europe; and what assessment she makes of the effect that this has, or is likely to have upon Britain, British subjects and the peace and security of Europe.

The Prime Minister: Whilst there have been no occasions when the Libyan authorities have claimed direct responsibility for specific acts of terrorism in this country, since the Libyan embassies in Europe were taken over by self-styled revolutionary committees in September 1979, information on recent Libyan involvement in terrorist activity is as follows:

March 1980
Libyan journalist shot in Regent's Park.

June 1980
Secretary-General of London Libyan People's Bureau states approval for killing of Libyan dissidents in Britain. He, and three other Libyans, expelled.

November 1980
Four Libyans convicted for poisoning of two children of Libyan dissident in Portsmouth.

March 1984
Bomb explosions in Manchester and London injuring more than 20 British citizens. Three Libyans convicted and six deported.

17 April 1984
WPC Fletcher shot dead by gunmen firing from Libyan People's Bureau, London. Ten Libyan dissidents injured in shooting. Resulted in seige of Libyan People's Bureau and ultimately its evacuation and closure.

21 June 1984
A Libyan student shot dead by Libyan gunmen in Athens.

July 1984
Two Libyan diplomats asked to leave London for activities incompatible with their status.

July 1984
Two Libyan dissidents, el Zawi and Fartaz, shot dead in Athens.

6 April 1985
Dinali, leading dissident shot dead in Bonn by Libyan gunman Tarhuni. Tarhuni sentenced to life imprisonment.

17 April 1985
Libyan Arab Airlines manager at Heathrow, London deported for anti-dissident activities.

17 April 1985
Libyan (Sodani) previously in United Kingdom deported from Belgium.

24 May 1985
Three Libyan students deported for anti-dissident activities.

September 1985
Egyptian police detained four-man Libyan terrorist team in Alexandria. Team were tasked to murder Bukkush, ex-Libyan prime minister. Sentenced to 25 years prison each.

27 December 1985
Shooting and grenade attacks at Rome and Vienna airports carried out by Abu Nidhal. Libya provided logistic support for attack in Vienna.

1986
Arms found in Republic of Ireland—including boxes of ammunition stamped "Libyan Armed Forces".

3 January 1986
Libyan student excluded from United Kingdom for planning anti-dissident attacks.

RECENT EVIDENCE

Berlin discotheque bombing: 5 April 1986
On 25 March instructions were sent from Tripoli to the Libyan People's Bureau in East Berlin to conduct a terrorist attack against the Americans. On 4 April the Libyan People's Bureau told Tripoli the attack would be carried out the following morning. In the early hours of 5 April a bomb exploded in a discotheque frequented by United States servicemen, killing two people and injuring 230. On 5 April the Libyan People's Bureau reported to Tripoli that the operation had been carried out successfully.

Support for IRA
Major arms find in Irish Republic, 26 January, included rifles and ammunition from Libya.

Paris—attempted bombing

In late March intelligence uncovered a plot to attack with a bomb civilians queueing for visas at the United States embassy in Paris. France expelled two members of the Libyan People's Bureau for their involvement.

The measures we and our European Community partners agreed on 21 April should reduce the threat of such activity against our citizens and interests.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Prime Minister what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Government of Libya about their support of the IRA since such support was identified; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: There is no doubt about Libyan support for the Provisional IRA. Since 1972 we have repeatedly protested to the Libyan Government about this, most recently at the last meeting between British and Libyan officials in Rome in March 1985.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Prime Minister what action Her Majesty's Government have taken since President Gaddafi came to power to seek to deter Libya from sponsoring state terrorism; with what result; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Our action has included repeated representations to the Libyan authorities, diplomatic action with and through other friendly Governments, breaking off diplomatic relations, expulsion of diplomats and other Libyans from the United Kingdom, imposition of a strict visa regime and a ban on new defence contracts. These measures we have taken have had some effect in reducing the ability of the Libyan authorities to sponsor and conduct terrorist attacks in the United Kingdom.

United States Export Regulations

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Prime Minister what guidance she proposes to give to United Kingdom citizens who become subject to the United States export regulations coming into force on 24 April.

The Prime Minister: Companies and persons doing business in the United Kingdom should be guided by United Kingdom law and their own commercial judgment.

Noraid

Mr. Mason asked the Prime Minister what representations she has made to President Reagan to outlaw Noraid; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The United States Government have made clear their opposition to those in the United States who give support of any kind to organisations involved directly or indirectly in terrorism in Northern Ireland. They take active steps to arrest and prosecute those engaged in the export of arms to the terrorists. Representations have been made on many occasions—together with thanks for the vigorous statements by the President and leading members of Congress.

Provisional IRA

Mr. Mason asked the Prime Minister if she will list the representations she has made to the United States of America, the European Economic Community and the Libyan Government on financial aid, military training and weapons sales to the Provisional Irish Republican Army; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The United States Government and the Governments of the European Community share our total opposition to terrorist violence of any kind. We have their close co-operation in the fight to deny all forms of support to the organisations engaged in terrorism in Northern Ireland.

Since 1972 we have repeatedly protested to the Libyan Government about their support for the Provisional Irish Republican Army, most recently at the last meeting between British and Libyan officials in Rome in March 1985.

Dr. Kurt Waldheim

Mr. Janner asked the Prime Minister if she will authorise the release of those Government documents hitherto withheld from the Public Record Office which contain references to the wartime activities of Dr. Kurt Waldheim; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to my answer on 22 April to the right hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Freeson).

Engagements

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 24 April.

Mr. Forth asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 24 April.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 24 April.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 24 April.

Mr. Flannery asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 24 April.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I shall attend a state banquet given by their majesties the King and Queen of Spain.

SCOTLAND

State Hospital, Carstairs

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what alterations and renovations are planned for the wards in the state hospital, Carstairs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: Following discussions which I had with the state hospital management committee last year, the committee has submitted proposals to the Scottish Home and Health Department for modernising the ward accommodation at the state hospital, Carstairs. These proposals are now being considered by the Department.

Speech Therapists

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made in the scientific and professional council in the claim by speech therapists for equal pay.

Mr. John Mackay: I understand that staff side interests representing speech therapists met the management side of the scientific and professional staffs Whitley Council on 24 March to amplify their claim for pay parity with other graduate National Health Service professions.

At the same time, however, two test cases had been lodged with industrial tribunals claiming equal pay for speech therapists with the professions. The management side of the Whitley Council have therefore declined to respond formally to the claim until they are clear about the implications of these referrals to industrial tribunals and have taken the necessary advice from the sources available to them.

Commonwealth Games

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what meetings he has had about the arrangements for the forthcoming Commonwealth Games; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Arrangements for the Commonwealth Games are the responsibility of Commonwealth Games (Scotland 1986) Ltd. with which my right hon. and learned Friend and I remain in close touch.

Sunday Trading

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland why, pursuant to the answer of 17 April, Official Report, columns 458-9, he is not prepared to examine Scottish legislation concerning shops opening in the context of the preservation of the traditional Scottish Sabbath; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: In Scotland the provisions in the Shops Act 1950 which restrict Sunday trading apply only to hairdressers and barbers. Accordingly, the law as it stands in Scotland accords generally with the view of the Government that legal sanctions should not be introduced to regulate activities which are more appropriately influenced by tradition, example and persuasion.

Prison Service

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards privatisation of the Scottish prison service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: There are no plans to privatise the Scottish prison service.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is satisfied with the standards of competence and efficiency in the prison service.

Mr. John MacKay: Yes.

Drunkenness

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with Strathclyde regional council, the Greater Glasgow health board and Glasgow district council on the funding of a designated place in terms of section 5 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1980; and if he will make a statement on measures to reduce the incidence of offences of being drunk and incapable.

Mr. John MacKay: Discussions have taken place over a number of years between officials of the Scottish Education Department and Strathclyde regional council, the appropriate social work authority. It remains the Government's policy to decriminalise drunkenness, and a decreasing proportion of such cases is now being prosecuted.

Highlands and Islands Development Board

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when Her Majesty's Government will announce their response to the remaining recommendations made by the Committee on Scottish Affairs in its report on the Highlands and Islands Development Board.

Mr. Rifkind: I understand that the Select Committee will today be publishing the Government's response on the Committee's proposals for transfer of tourism responsibilities from the Highlands and Islands Development Board to the Scottish Tourist Board, the establishment of a rural development fund and the extension of the Highlands and Islands Development Board area. I have arranged to have copies placed in the Library of the House.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate, for each local authority in Scotland for the year 1985-86, the needs grant per adult and the safety net per adult that would apply under the proposals in "Paying for Local Government", Cmnd. 9714, stating the assumption as to the amount of standard grant per adult and the estimate as to the supplement to standard grant per adult from non-domestic rates used in the calculations.

Mr. Rifkind [pursuant to his reply, 23 April 1986, c.173-74]: The information requested is set out in the table. As requested, the calculations relate to 1985-86 and use the grant distribution and assessments of need relevant to that year. There have been changes in grant distribution and assessments since then and there will be further changes before the date proposed for the introduction of the proposed new arrangements for financing local government. To that extent the figures can hardly be regarded as a reliable guide to the impact that the Green Paper proposals will eventually have.

For each authority the grant payable per head is shown. The grant consists of a needs grant and a standard grant, the latter supplemented by the proceeds of non-domestic rates. The standard grant assumption is £323·66 per adult for regions and £4·30 per adult for districts. The addition for non-domestic rates would be £190·15 per adult for regions, £71·53 for districts.

As stated in the Green Paper, special consideration will have to be given to the island authorities, and figures for them are not included in the table.

Local authority area	Needs and standard grant with non-domestic rate supplement per adult £	Safety net per adult £

Monopolies and Mergers Commission (Reports)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many reports he has received from the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in each of the last six years; how many gave rise to Government action; if he will list their subject matter; if he has any plans to alter the Commission's terms of reference; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The reports received from the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in the years 1980-85 are as follows. Of the total of 76 the Government took action on 55.

There are no plans at present to alter the commission's terms of reference. However, my right hon. Friend hopes soon to announce proposals for a general review of competition law and policy, and the role of the commission would naturally fall within the scope of such a review.

Petrol Prices

Mr. Bendall asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the outcome of his consideration of possible action on petrol prices under the competition legislation.

Mr. Channon: The petrol market is still adjusting to the recent falls in the price of crude oil and is in a state of disequilibrium. The wide range of prices at the pumps (currently a spread of some 25p a gallon) suggests a considerable degree of local competition; and in general prices are now below levels prevailing before the budget.

These developments in the petrol retail market suggest that Government action on prices at present would be premature. However the Director General of Fair Trading will continue to monitor developments in this market closely: and I will hold in reserve the possibility of using my powers under section 13 of the Competition Act 1980 or taking other action under competition legislation if this appears to be justified by market conditions.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Family Courts

Mr. Best asked the Attorney-General when the consultation paper on family courts will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Thurnham asked the Attorney-General when he now expects that the working party on family courts will produce its report; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: It is hoped that the interdepartmental working party's consultation paper will be published shortly and that a final report on the feasibility of the main options for a unified family court will be published later this year or early in 1987.

Access Centres

Mr. Best asked the Attorney-General if he will list all the access centres, being places at which specific provision has been made for parental access to children following breakdown of marriage, in the United Kingdom; what funding his Department gives to them; what plans he has for any extension of such centres; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Government do not have this information for any part of the United Kingdom and it could be collected only at disproportionate cost. The Lord Chancellor does not provide funding for access centres and has no plans to do so.

ENERGY

British Gas

Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about his Department's expenditure in connection with the intended sale of shares in British Gas.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The Government's intention to privatise the British Gas Corporation was announced on 7 May 1985 at column 639. The Gas Bill is now before Parliament.

Pending parliamentary approval of the necessary Estimates, urgent payments in connection with preliminary and main sale expenses in 1986-87, including some payments in anticipation of the Bill, will be met from repayable advances from the Contingencies Fund.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Disarmament

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives the United Kingdom deputation will seek to take at the next session of the conference on disarmament in Europe, to be held in Stockholm.

Mr. Renton: During the 10th session of the Stockholm conference on disarmament in Europe, which opened on 15 April, the United Kingdom delegation, together with its Western partners, will seek to increase the pace of drafting on, inter alia, the notification and verification of a wide range of military activities. Drafting has made little headway so far in the face of Eastern reluctance to negotiate seriously.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action has been taken so far by the conference on disarmament in Geneva on the United Kingdom's paper on seismic monitoring of nuclear tests.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Ynys Môn (Mr. Best) on 12 February. As I made clear on that occasion, we regret that our paper on seismic monitoring for a nuclear test ban and our two earlier papers have still not received the critical attention they deserve.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the east bloc deputation has shown any recent willingness to advance the progress of the mutual and balanced force reductions talks by providing realistic details of its force levels.

Mr. Renton: No. Despite the constructive Western offer to accept reductions without prior agreement on force levels, the East continues to refuse to exchange information broken down to a level at which effective verification is possible.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the achievements of the spring session of the conference on disarmament in Geneva, and what initiatives have been taken by the United Kingdom deputation.

Mr. Renton: The conference on disarmament has established ad hoc committees on chemical weapons, radiological weapons and on a comprehensive programme of disarmament. Discussion on a possible mandate for committees on outer space and a nuclear test ban are continuing. The United Kingdom delegation has been playing a full part in the range of work at the conference but has been paying particular attention to the ad hoc committee on chemical weapons which we are chairing in 1986. The spring session of the conference ends on 25 April.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the current work of the ad hoc committee on chemical weapons since Dr. Cromartie assumed the chairmanship for 1986.

Mr. Renton: The 1986 mandate for the ad hoc committee on chemical weapons at the conference on disarmament was approved on 6 February 1986. The committee has set up three subsidiary working groups. Topics considered have included the control of civil chemicals; the destruction of chemical weapon stocks; and the institutions that would be necessary to implement a CW convention. Under the overall chairmanship of Dr. Ian Cromartie, leader of the United Kingdom delegation to the conference, negotiations have been detailed and businesslike.

Outer Space (Arms Race)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the work to date of the ad hoc committee on the prevention of an arms race in outer space.

Mr. Renton: The ad hoc committee had useful discussions in 1985, particularly on the legal regime in outer space on which the United Kingdom tabled a well received paper. No mandate has yet been agreed for a committee in 1986, but we hope this will be possible soon.

Biological Weapons

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the initiatives which the United Kingdom deputation intends to take at the preparatory committee for the biological weapons convention review conference in Geneva.

Mr. Renton: The preparatory committee for the biological weapons convention review conference will meet in Geneva from 28 April to 2 May. It is expected to deal exclusively with procedural matters, and is not therefore an appropriate forum in which to launch initiatives. Substantive discussion of the issues will take place at the review conference itself in September.

Ethnic Turkish Minority

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise with the Bulgarian Foreign Minister, within the context of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, the treatment of the ethnic Turkish minority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. and learned Friend discussed this with the Bulgarian Foreign Minister during his visit to Sofia in February 1985. The question has also been raised in CSCE fora, at the Ottawa and Budapest meetings in 1985, and at the Berne meeting on human contacts, which is currently taking place. The issue will continue to cause concern, since reports of mistreatment continue to circulate and have not been satisfactorily explained.

United States Bases

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the use of bases in the United Kingdom by the United States for military action was reported to the Security Council under the terms of article 51 of the United Nations charter.

Mr. Renton: The Government of the United States of America reported in a letter of 14 April to the United Nations Secretary-General, in accordance with article 51 of the United Nations Charter, that United States forces had "exercised the United State's right of self-defence by responding to an on-going pattern of attacks by the Government of Libya".

This letter did not refer to the use of bases in the United Kingdom.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will now publish in the Official Report the contents of the memorandum of understanding, signed in 1952 between the United States Government and Her Majesty's Government, over the use of military bases in Britain.

Mr. Renton: The arrangements governing use by United States forces of bases in the United Kingdom were first agree by Mr. Attlee and President Truman in 1951. These arrangments were endorsed by Mr. Churchill and President Truman in further discussions in 1952. The understanding then reached was made public in a joint communiqué at the time which reads as follow:

"Under arrangements made for the common defence, the United States has the use of certain bases in the United Kingdom. We reaffirm the understanding that the use of these bases in an emergency would be a matter for joint decision by Her Majesty's Government and the United States Government in the light of the circumstances prevailing at the time."

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the terms of the agreement made for common defence between the United States and the United Kingdom for the use of certain military bases in Britain are registered with the United Nations under article 102 of the United Nations Charter.

Mr. Renton: The arrangements governing use by United States forces of bases in the United Kingdom are not of a nature to require registration at the United Nations under article 102 of the United Nations charter.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Drugs Traffic

64. Mr. Flannery asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further measures are being taken to cope with the illicit drug traffic at United Kingdom seaports and airports.

Mr. Brooke: One hundred and fifty additional staff are being allocated to drugs work in 1986-87 and a further 200 staff are being added to the customs complement to maintain levels of routine controls over passengers and freight in the face of increased traffic. A total of £10 million has been made available for the development and provision of drugs detection equipment over the next three years, and improvements will also be made to the drugs reference and information computer.

Prison Officers (Pay)

65. Sir John Farr asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the latest situation on the negotiations over prison officers' pay.

Mr. Brooke: There has been one meeting between officials and representatives of the Prison Officers and Scottish Prison Officers Associations to discuss their pay claim. The further progress of negotiations with the Prison Officers Association depends upon the course of its current dispute with the Home Office over the determination of manning levels.

Tax Allowances

Mr. Frank Field asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he is yet able to reply to the question tabled by the hon. Member for Birkenhead for answer on 7 March 1986 on the share of tax paid by each decile group.

Mr. Brooke: I regret the delay in providing a reply to the hon. Member's question. It is being answered today.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what extra revenue would result from allowing all tax allowances, both personal and non-structural, at the standard rate of tax only.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will express the percentage shares of tax paid for each year since 1977-78 by the following income groups: the top 10 per cent., 10 to 20 per cent., 20 to 30 per cent., 30 to 40 per cent., 40 to 50 per cent., 50 to 60 per cent., 60 to 70 per cent., 70 to 80 per cent., 80 to 90 per cent., and bottom 10 per cent., respectively.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 7 March 1986, c. 284]: The available information is as follows. The analysis is of single people and married couples paying income tax in each year. The quantiles are determined by reference to tax liability. The figures are based on the surveys of personal incomes for years up to 1983-84. For subsequent years, they are based on projections from the 1983-84 survey and are therefore provisional.

TRANSPORT

Driving Licences

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many replacement driving licences, full and provisional, were issued in each of the past five years.

Mr. Spicer: Separate figures are available only as follows:

	Replacements		Duplicates
	Full million	Provisional	Full	Provisional
1985	2	212,000	271,000	31,000
1984	1·90	160,000	295,000	44,000

Total figures for the remaining years are:

	Replacements million	Duplicates
1983	1·95	272,000
1982	1·77	272,000
1981	1·39	207,000

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied with the security printing aspects of driving licences.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Yes.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider including photographic identification of the licencee in all new driving licences issued.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply given on 21 April 1986 at column 11.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider including in driving licences personal details similar to those included in passports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Driving licences contain full names, addresses and dates of birth; the inclusion of further details would be inappropriate and impracticable given the amount of information already included for statutory reasons. I do not propose to make a statement but I shall write to my hon. Friend with further details.

Okehampton Bypass

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Transport when the alternative land for public open space for the southern route of the proposed Okehampton bypass was identified; what factors inhibited the identification of such land prior to the Joint Committee proceedings on the special procedure orders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Exchange land for the small part of Meldon Woods required for construction of the bypass was identified before publication of the draft compulsory purchase order in 1978. The additional land which we are hoping to acquire by agreement and make available for use by the public was offered to the Department by its owners in October 1985.

Liverpool Airport

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to pay an official visit to Liverpool airport in the near future; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have no plans at present to visit Liverpool airport.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Transport to what extent he plans to monitor the arrangements for the administration of Liverpool airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Once the Airports Bill is enacted, I shall be requiring the passenger transport authority to form a company to carry on the business of operating Liverpool airport, and to submit a scheme for the transfer of property, rights and liabilities to that company.

Vehicle Registration Prefix

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans his Department has to assist motor traders who may suffer as a result of the decision to change the vehicle registration prefix dates to October.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The decision to change the month in which the new vehicle prefix letter is introduced to October in 1987 was designed to help the motor industry as a whole to overcome problems associated with high peaks of sales in the current month of change (August). The question of assistance does therefore not arise.

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has had from vehicle suppliers with regard to his Department's plans to change the vehicle prefix registration dates to October.

Mr. Michael Spicer: We have received a number of representations from the motor industry on this issue. Those from motor manufacturers generally support the change to October and those from motor dealers and importers are opposed to it.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Industry and Education

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what initiatives Her Majesty's Government have taken since 1979 to improve relations between industry and education.

Mr. Chris Patten: The development of strong, effective and wide-ranging links between industry and commerce and all parts of the education system is a major aim of Government policy. The many specific measures introduced to encourage this partnership are set out in:

The White Paper "Better Schools" (Cmnd. 9496) which emphasised the importance of preparing all young people for work and the importance in this respect of, inter alia, the Technical and Vocational Education Initiative and the Lower Attaining Pupils Programme.

The White Paper "Training for Jobs" (Cmnd. 9135) which spelled out initiatives in the area of vocational education, including the formation of the Business and Technician Education Council, the establishment of the College Employers Links Project, and arrangements for MSC to increase its purchases from colleges of further education.

The White Paper "Education and Training for Young People" (Cmnd. 9482) which spelled out developments in the area of new technologies, particularly the Micros in Schools Scheme and the British School Technology Scheme, and announced the establishment of a Review of Vocational Qualifications.

The Green Paper "The Development of Higher Education into the 1990s" which emphasised the importance of Higher Education and industry and commerce working more closely together; and which pointed to Government measures strengthening this partnership, such as the Professional Industrial and Commercial Updating (PICKUP) Programme, and the provision, at the urging of industry, of 5,000 additional student places in Higher Education in electronic engineering, computer science and other relevant subjects through the Engineering and Technology Programme.

Village Schools, Warwickshire

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will examine the case put forward by parents for the retention of the village schools in Baddesley, Clinton and Wolverton in Warwickshire, which the Warwickshire county council currently proposes closing.

Mr. Dunn: Under section 12 of the Education Act 1980, a local education authority wishing to cease to maintain a school must publish proposals and submit a copy of the published proposals to the Secretary of State. I understand that no statutory proposals have been published in respect of schools in Baddesley, Clinton and Wolverton.

Hilary Buxton

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he will reply to the letters from the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth dated 3 December and 6 February referring to Hilary Buxton of the University of London.

Mr. Walden: I regret the delay in replying to my hon. Friend. I have now written to him.

General Certificate of Secondary Education.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what extra resources in terms of finance, new equipment, in-service training and new textbooks have been made available for the introduction of the new general certificate of secondary education in Humberside.

Mr. Chris Patten: In support of expenditure on in-service teacher training for the GCSE, Humberside local education authority has been allocated £135,860 under the in-service teacher training grant scheme. My right hon. Friend has proposed making available £20 million under the education support grant programme to enable local authorities to make additional provision for books and equipment for the first GCSE examination courses. My right hon. Friend is consulting the local authority associations about the arrangements for this provision which will be in addition to the resources which local authorities may otherwise allocate to the GCSE.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence what studies are being conducted into the future redeployment of nuclear warhead design staff in preparation for the eventual conclusion of a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No such studies are being undertaken.

BAOR

Mr. Denzil Davies asked the Secretary of State for Defence what further action is required to achieve the intended enhancement of the armoured capability of the British Army of the Rhine.

Mr. Stanley: In addition to the formation of a 12th Armoured Regiment, the introduction of the Challenger tank into BAOR is well under way, and progress is being made on further improvements to our main battle tank fleet.

Armoured Regiments

Mr. Denzil Davies asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the orders for new equipment made necessary by the Government's intention to increase the number of armoured regiments in the British Army have been placed.

Mr. Stanley: All the necessary orders have been placed or are in hand in respect of the capital equipment for 12th Armoured Regiment.

Mr. Denzil Davies asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he still intends to increase the number of armoured regiments to 12 by the end of the decade.

Mr. Stanley: Yes. We intend to form 12th Armoured Regiment in BAOR by the end of the decade; there is also one further armoured regiment stationed in the United Kingdom.

Procurement (Contracts)

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the effect upon his Department's budget and upon his Department's relations with its suppliers of the transition from cost-plus to fixed price as the basis of contracting for defence procurement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The proportion by value of MOD contracts placed under cost plus percentage fee terms is, indeed, declining under the the influence of the MOD's drive for better value for money.

Where a contract is now placed under fixed-price terms it will have the twin advantages of providing an incentive for the contractor to perform efficiently to meet the contract requirement, and it will place a limit on the Ministry's financial commitment.

However, it is not possible to specify the overall effect on the Ministry's budget resulting from increased fixed price contracting, because the costs of the alternative procurement routes would be purely speculative.

Trident

Mr. Straw asked the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications of the latest estimate of the cost of Trident for expenditure on conventional equipment, including spare parts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Defence gave on 11 March 1986 to my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, South (Mr. Yeo) at columns 800-1.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what are the terms and the objectives of the architecture study on the strategic defence initiative agreed between Her Majesty's Government and the United States Administration.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The so-called European architecture study which the United States wishes to place with the Ministry of Defence is still subject to the outcome of current negotiations. It would be inappropriate to provide details at this stage.

Minister of State for the Armed Forces (Cyprus Visit)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence for what specific purposes in relation to the breach of security at United Kingdom bases in Cyprus the Minister of State, the right hon. Member for Tonbridge and Malling (Mr. Stanley) visited installations at Ayios Nikolayos, Episkopi, Akrotiri, and in the Troodos mountains in September 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: My visit to Cyprus in September 1983 had no such purposes.

Binary Chemical Weapons

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Defence what instructions he is giving to Her Majesty's Government's representatives to the North Atlantic Council meeting to be held on 20 May on the subject of the deployment and use of binary chemical weapons.

Mr. Stanley: I am not aware of any such meeting. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) on 7 March at column 313.

Royal Dockyards

Mr. Hicks asked the Secretary of State for Defence what are the purposes and terms of reference of the investigation by the accountants, Coopers and Lybrand, into the possibility of a Government-owned plc being established to administer and manage the royal naval dockyard, Devonport, as from April 1987; whether this means that proposals for the introduction of commercial management have now been abandoned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown) on 18 April 1986 at columns 523-24.

Mr. Peter Levene

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the arrangements designed to prevent a conflict of interest between Mr. Peter Levene's duties as Chief of Defence Procurement and those he previously exercised in his former position as chairman of United Scientific Holdings Ltd.

Mr. Younger: I have decided that the arrangements instituted in respect of Mr. Peter Levene's appointment as Chief of Defence Procurement to prevent a conflict of interest need not be continued beyond the 12-month period originally envisaged and which expired on 18 March 1986. I have accordingly instructed that Mr. Levene should have unrestricted access to all papers falling within the area of his formal responsibilities as Chief of Defence Procurement including any relating to business transacted with those companies with which he was formerly associated.

ENVIRONMENT

Royal Parks (Parking Offences)

Mr. Higgins asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why the cost of collecting fines for parking offences in royal parks is higher than the cost of collecting ordinary parking offence fines; and what steps he proposes to take to reduce them.

Mr. Tracey: The collection of fines for parking offences is a matter for the appropriate magistrates' courts. My right hon. Friend has no information about the cost of collecting these fines. The fixed penalty system for parking offences, as an alternative to prosecution through the magistrates' court, has not yet been fully applied to the royal parks, but it is planned to do so as soon as possible.

Jubilee Gardens

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he authorised the new charges for the use of Jubilee gardens; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: No. The setting of charges is a matter for the South Bank Board, which manages Jubilee gardens on behalf of the owners, the London Residuary Body.

Green Belt

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the implications of circular 15/84 on land for housing for the provisions, recommendations and policy of circular 14/84 on green belts.

Mr. Tracey: These two circulars were issued together on 4 July 1984. Circular 15/84 on land for housing makes clear in paragraph 3 that the policies in it should be implemented in ways which are compatible with the policies set out in circular 14/84. In particular it says,

"Circular 14/84 reaffirms the Government's commitment to Green Belt policy and there must continue to be a general presumption against any inappropriate development within them . . . The best means of protecting valuable amenity land is to ensure an acceptable choice of available sites. The aim is to accommodate necessary development in ways that protect amenity and ensure economy and efficiency in the use of land. The Secretary of State does not consider that these objectives are irreconcilable."

London Marathon

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide the necessary resources to the London Marathon Board to ensure that the 1987 London marathon may take place.

Mr. Tracey: Resource matters are for the London Marathon boards but the Government will continue to give this important event support and encouragement.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Enrivonment what representations he has received seeking Government support for the 1987 London marathon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: I have had a number of contacts with the race director. I have received no formal representations from other sources. The Government will continue to give support to the London marathon, as they have this year and in previous years.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends (a) to study and (b) to produce a report on the effects on local trade, industry, property values, and public morale of the possibility of a nuclear waste repository being sited in a particular area as part of the examinations he has recently set in hand.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department commissioned research on social and socio-economic impacts of generic disposal facilities for radioactive waste as part of the study of best practicable environmental options for radioactive waste management. The report of this research is available through the National Lending Library (DOE/RW/85-182). An independent assessment of such impacts, related specifically to development of new facilities by NIREX, is also being commissioned by the Department.

Firhill Basin

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to the reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill, of 8 April, Official Report, column 24, about the Firhill basin, what progress the British Waterways Board has made; and what is the policy of the board's leisure division towards the enhancement of the basin.

Mr. John Patten: British Waterways Board welcomes the proposed enhancement of the basin and has agreed to support the project in various ways. It has, in particular, undertaken to clear the mound of dredgings within a few weeks depending on weather conditions.

Construction Industry

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what grants have been made by his Department to the construction industry in each of the last six years; which organisations have received them; and what finances he proposes to make available to them during the next two years.

Sir George Young: The construction industry is eligible for a wide variety of grants paid by the Department of Trade and Industry on the recommendation of my Department. Grants paid to individual firms directly by my Department under the Industrial Development Acts 1972 and 1982 in each of the last six years were as follows:

1980-81	118,153
1981-82	89,801
1982-83	Nil
1983-84	Nil
1984-85	Nil
1985-86	150,000

Grants paid to the British Board of Agrement were:

1980-81	545K
1981-82	545K
1982-83	575K
1983-84	300K
1984-85	370K
1985-86	265K

Grants paid in financial sponsorship (under Class VIII, Vote 1 of Supply Estimates) were:

1980-81	Nil
1981-82	14,491
1982-83	4,034
1983-84	1,200
1985-86	58,000

Recipients have included NEDO, Construction Industry Computing Association, ICE and RIBA.

In addition to the above grants, my Department supports research work in the industry, currently providing about £2 million annually. The industry also benefits from a number of grants and subsidies paid to local authorities, new towns and the Housing Corporation towards the cost of providing and renovating housing; and from PSA development work in funding new British standards and new products.

Supply Estimates for 1986-87 include provision for the following:

Industrial Development grants	150,000
Grant to British Board of Agrement	175,000
Other grants	73,200

I also propose to make a contribution of £2,700 to the British National Committee of the Euro-International Concrete Committee which, together with contributions from the PSA and Department of Transport, should cover half of the cost of class A annual membership of the CEB.

Other finance made be may available in 1986-87 if the need arises. Details of estimates for 1987-88 cannot be provided at this stage as they will depend on proposals and decisions that have yet to be made.

Rivers Stour and Orwell

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he has received a report from the Nature Conservancy Council in respect of the proposed designation of the estuaries of the Rivers Stour and Orwell as special protection areas under the European Community directive on the conservation of wild birds (79/409/EEC); and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has yet received a report from the Nature Conservancy Council in respect of the proposed designation of the estuaries of the Rivers Stour and Orwell as a site for listing under the Ramsar convention on the conservation of wetlands of international importance especially as a waterfowl habitat; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold A report from the NCC proposing designation of this site under both directive 79/409/EEC and the Ramsar convention was received earlier this year. Consultations with other interested Government Departments are currently in progress and a decision will be made as soon as possible.

Beaches

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has established a timetable for the designation of beaches as fit for public use under EEC directives; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold No. In 1979 the Government identified 27 bathing waters for the purpose of directive 76/160/EEC. These were identified on the basis of their use by bathers and there are no immediate plans for further designations.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the cost of designating as fit for public use those beaches and rivers covered by the provisions of EEC directives.

Mrs. Rumbold This information is not immediately available in my Department. I shall write to the hon. Member setting out the costs incurred and expected to be incurred in connection with the surveillance of and, where appropriate, improvements to the identified bathing waters to bring them to the directive's standards.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment which beaches have been (a) designated under EEC directives as fit for public use and on which dates and (b) which have not, in: Whitby, Scarborough, Bridlington, Hornsea, Withernsea, Cleethorpes, Mablethorpe, Skegness, Hunstanton, Sheringham, Cromer, Caister, Great Yarmouth, Lowestoft, Southwold, Aldeburgh, Walton-on-the-Naze, Clacton, Whitstable, Margate, Ramsgate, Deal, Folkestone, Hythe, Hastings, St. Leonards, Eastbourne, Seaford, Worthing, Littlehampton, Bognor Regis, Hayling Island, Lymington, Swanage, Weymouth, Portland, Lyme Regis, Sidmouth, Exmouth, Dawlish, Teignmouth, Torquay, Torbay, Paignton, Brixham, Looe, Fowey, Falmouth, St. Ives, Newquay, Bude, Ilfracombe, Minehead, Weston-super-Mare, Barry, Porthcawl, Tenby, St. David's, Aberaeron, Aberystwyth, Tywyn, Barmouth, Harlech, Porthmadog, Pwlheli, Rhyl, Prestatyn, Llandudno, Southport, St. Anne's, Blackpool, Morecambe and Whitehaven, respectively.

Mrs. Rumbold: Of the places mentioned by the hon. Member, bathing waters have been identified under directive 76/160/EEC at: Scarborough, Bridlington, Margate, Swanage, Weymouth, Torquay, Paignton, St. Ives, Newquay and Weston-super-Mare. The identifications were made in 1979. It was made clear then that non-identification did not imply that a beach was unclean or unsafe or that it would have to be closed or restricted to bathers in any way.

Water (Nitrate and Lead Content)

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment by what levels, by each water authority area, nitrate and lead content vary from those laid down in EEC directives.

Mrs. Rumbold: Nitrate levels are within the 50 mg per litre limit set in the EC drinking water directive except in the following areas:

Water authority areas

	Anglian	Severn Trent	Thames	Yorkshire
Number of public supply areas exceeding 50 mg/l	27	26	1	1
Highest nitrate level	*80	*83	*60	*80

* Milligram per litre

In most parts of England lead levels are within the limit set in the EC directive. In the remaining areas water treatment is being or will shortly be used to reduce levels below the directive limit. Details are given in the following table:

Water Authority Areas

	Anglian	Northumbrian	North-West	Severn-Trent	Yorkshire
Number of public supply areas where water in more than 2½ per cent. of properties may exceed the EC Directive lead limit	40	1	61	7	10

As lead levels vary significantly from house to house depending on a variety of factors including the individual plumbing arrangements in the house, more detailed information is not available.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what would be the cost of bringing (a) nitrate levels and (b) lead levels in drinking water to those stipulated in EEC directives.

Mrs. Rumbold: The capital cost for nitrate would be about £50 million with £5 million annual running costs. The capital cost of water treatment to reduce lead levels would be £2-£3 million with a similar sum for annual running costs. For the cost of replacing lead pipes in any remaining properties I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing, Urban Affairs and Construction, on 28 October 1985, at columns 367-68.

Merseyside Residuary Body

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to seek to ensure that meetings of the Merseyside Residuary Body are open to the general public.

Mr. Tracey: I have no such plans. Residuary bodies may decide for themselves the arrangements for their meetings, though it is normal practice for non-departmental public bodies, the category to which residuary bodies belong, to hold internal rather than public meetings.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the terms and conditions of service of the chairman and members of the Merseyside Residuary Body; and what is their remuneration.

Mr. Tracey: The information as to current remuneration is as follows:

Members and Remuneration to be paid

	(per annum) £
Norman Brodrick (Chairman)	17,600
Duncan Forbes	11,200
John Hill	11,200
Bill Hughes	11,200
Leslie Jones	11,200
Kenneth Medlock	11,200
Barrie Marsh	5,600
Councillor Jim Lloyd (Co-ordinating Committee Member)	5,600

Remuneration for the chairman and Messrs Forbes, Hill, Hughes Jones and Medlock is on a two-days-a-week basis; for the other two members, one. Remuneration is subject to review according to changing work load and is subject to abatement, if applicable in respect of public sector pension received.

The provisions governing appointments are given in schedule 13 of the Local Government Act 1985. It would not be appropriate for me to disclose individual terms of appointment.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to seek to ensure that the minutes of the Merseyside Residuary Body are made available to the public.

Mr. Tracey: The availability of its minutes is a matter for the Merseyside residuary body.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment by what means members of the public may obtain information regarding decisions of the Merseyside Residuary Body.

Mr. Tracey: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 11 April, at column 209.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many meetings have taken place between his Department and representatives of the Merseyside Residuary Body since 31 March.

Mr. Tracey: My officials have had frequent meetings with representatives of the Merseyside Residuary Body since 31 March.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has issued any directions to the Merseyside Residuary Body as to the disposal of the former accommodation of the Merseyside county council at Metropolitan house, Liverpool; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: My right hon. Friend has not issued any directions to the Merseyside Residuary Body about Metropolitan house.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals are currently being considered by the Merseyside Residuary Body for the removal of the Merseyside county council insignia from buildings, vehicles, hoardings and publications.

Mr. Tracey: This is a matter for the Merseyside Residuary Body.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what directions he has given to the Merseyside Residuary Body since 1 April.

Mr. Tracey: None.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the machinery by which the Merseyside Residuary Body maintains contact with (a) his Department, (b) the Merseyside task force and (c) the Merseyside metropolitan district councils.

Mr. Tracey: Ministers meet the chairmen of residuary bodies from time to time. Officials of my Department—including those in the Merseyside task force—are in regular contact with the Merseyside Residuary Body. Meetings with the district councils are a matter for the residuary body.

Merseyside County Council

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received opposing the abolition of the Merseyside county council; what his response has been; and if he will place any correspondence he has received on the subject in the Library.

Mr. Tracey: My right hon. Friend has received some representations opposing and some in favour of abolition. His response has been that by abolishing an unnecessary and wasteful tier we have brought local government closer to the people it serves. It would not be appropriate for such correspondence to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the first annual report and accounts of the Merseyside Residuary Body; and when these will be laid before Parliament.

Mr. Tracey: Residuary bodies have been asked to prepare their first annual reports for the part-year from their establishment to 31 March 1986. Their accounts will be for the same period. It is too early to suggest precise timing, but we would not expect to receive these documents before September. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will thereafter lay the annual reports, statements of accounts and any audit reports on them in both Houses.

Homeless Persons

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the implications for the operation of the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act of the judgment in the case of Puhlhofer v. Hillingdon borough council.

Mr. John Patten: We are considering carefully the implications of the House of Lord's judgment.

Croxteth Hall and Country Park

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to discuss the future of Croxteth hall and country park with the Merseyside Residuary Body and the Countryside Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: My noble Friend the Minister of State has already asked the Merseyside Residuary Body, in consultation with the Countryside Commission and other interested parties, to bring forward proposals for the future of Croxteth hall and country park at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will pay an official visit to the Croxteth hall and country park on Merseyside to discuss its future with interesed parties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: My right hon. Friend has no plans to make a visit at this stage.

Anglian Water Authority

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will confirm the Anglian Water Authority (Middle Level Transfer Order) 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend is not yet in a position to make the order as the Department is currently in correspondence with the water authority about it.

Pollution

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to revoke the Control of Pollution (Exemption of Certain Discharges from Control) Order 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend, together with his right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Secretary of State for Wales has decided to vary the 1983 order to bring all the main categories of exempt discharges under control. The necessary statutory instrument will be laid before the House as soon as possible.

The variation of the 1983 order will provide a better basis for improvement programmes, particularly as it extends full control to coastal and estuary waters. The continuation of recent investment levels should allow major improvement to unsatisfactory discharges of sewage effluent to areas of environmental importance within the next 10 to 15 years.

Knowsley (Housing)

Mr. Thornton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has yet reached a decision on Knowsley council's admission to the urban housing renewal unit on the Hillside, New Hutte and Tower Hill estates: and when he next intends to visit Knowsley.

Sir George Young: While speaking at Knowsley's housing conference today I was pleased to be able to announce my right hon. Friend's favourable response to the proposals for schemes on the Hillside and New Hutte estates. He has also agreed to fund a consultation exercise with the tenants as a first stage towards a scheme on the Tower hill estate.

The comprehensive package of proposals for these schemes which have been worked up in close consultation with my Department's urban housing renewal unit and the Merseyside task force include:

effective locally based management arrangements;
the active involvement of residents in future decision-making;
environmental and structural improvements;
and much needed repairs and security works.

Hillside Estate, Huyton

One of the many benefits for this post-war estate of 721 dwellings will be the provision of a local estate-based office dealing with day to day management and repairs. The cost of providing this office will be met by a targeted urban programme grant from the unit's resources. This grant will also cover essential repairs and security improvements to the existing dwellings. The grant will total £142,000. We expect that the work force provided by NACRO's managing agency to undertake the work will be recruited from the local community.

We have also agreed in principle to a targeted housing investment programme allocation of £125,000 to meet the cost of converting 16 houses into 32 single-person flats and for repairs to the external fabric of nearly half the dwellings on the estate.

The cost of refurbishing the shopping parade will be met from Knowsley's existing urgan renewal programme.

New Hutte, Halewood

We are pleased to give approval in principle to a housing investment allocation of £100,000 in 1986-87 to cover the cost of repair works to deal with the growing problem of water penetration in the maisonettes.

A two-year project by the Co-operative Development Services will actively encourage residents to participate in this redevelopment programme and will reinstate a sense of community spirit and pride in the estate. UHRU urban programme funding in the region of £122,000 will help finance this scheme and will also facilitate the provision of security measures to decks and stairways and comprehensive environmental improvements including remodelling of open spaces.

A further benefit to the estate will be the provision of a locally based office providing a comprehensive range of housing services. I regard this as an essential component of the package in order to sustain the improvements being made through other measures.

I am greatly encouraged by the development of these proposals which are yet more examples of the excellent progress being made as a result of close co-operation between a local authority and my Department's urban housing renewal unit.

Small Businesses

Mr. John Watts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the value of contracts placed by his Department with small businesses in each of the financial years since 1978-79; and what percentage of total expenditure on purchase of goods and services those amounts represented.

Sir George Young: Further to my reply of 18 April at column 509, I regret that the Department does not keep records in the way requested. In 1984-85 PSA spent £682 million on maintenance work, a large part of which will have been carried out by small local firms, and £968 million on new construction, for which tender lists are weighted in favour of local firms for the smaller contracts. Such firms will also often act as subcontractors on the larger contracts. In the same year, The Crown Suppliers purchased approximately £180 million of goods and services, excluding fuel, of which approximately 15 per cent. was thought to have been awarded to contractors employing fewer than 100 people.

Local Authorities (Grant-Related Expenditure)

Mr. James Couchman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, when he proposes to publish details of the service components of local authorities' grant related expenditure for 1986-87.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 17 April 1986, c. 476]: My right hon. Friend has today placed in the Library of the House copies of "The Technical Handbook of Grant-Related Expenditure, 1986-87" which provides the information. A copy is being sent to each local authority in England, and to each of the local authority associations.

THE ARTS

Jubilee Gardens

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts if the South Bank Board has yet signed the agency agreement for Jubilee gardens; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts is currently abroad and I have been asked to reply.

The agency agreement has not yet been signed; signature is expected shortly.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Benefits

Mr. Brandon-Bravo asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any further plans for changes in the rules concerning benefits for unemployed people.

Mr. Newton: Section 20(1) of the Social Security Act 1975 requires a person claiming unemployment benefit to be disqualified from receiving benefit for up to six weeks if he: voluntarily leaves employment without just cause; refuses or fails, without good cause, to apply for a suitable job; neglects to avail himself of a reasonable opportunity of suitable employment; fails to carry out reasonable official recommendations to assist him to find suitable employment; refuses or fails to avail himself of a reasonable opportunity of approved training; or loses employment through misconduct.

There are parallel rules for supplementary benefit. If a person disqualified under Section 20(1) (or someone who would be disqualified if he had underlying title to unemployment benefit) applies for supplementary benefit, that benefit is paid at a reduced level, also for up to six weeks. The amount of the reduction, currently prescribed in regulation 8 of the Supplementary Benefit (Requirements) Regulations 1983 is 40 per cent. of the appropriate scale rate, or 20 per cent. in cases where there is pregnancy or serious illness in the household. This deduction applies only to the benefit paid for the claimant personally, and not to any benefit payable for a partner or child.

The Government have reviewed these arrangements and propose to extend the maximum period of disqualification from 6 weeks to 13 weeks, and to make a similar extension in the maximum period of reduction in supplementary benefit.

Decisions on, for example, whether the claimant had just cause for leaving his job, and the actual period of disqualification or benefit reduction within the maximum will, as now, continue to be taken by independent adjudication officers. The requirement to make a lower reduction in supplementary benefit in cases where there is serious illness or pregnancy in the household will be maintained, as will the right of appeal to a social security appeal tribunal.

For unemployment benefit, an amendment to achieve the proposed change will be tabled to the Social Security Bill currently being considered in Standing Committee; this will also provide for the removal by regulations of the present anomaly whereby a disqualified person who remains unemployed to exhaustion of benefit effectively has his entitlement deferred rather than reduced. It will provide also for any further necessary amendments to be made by regulations. The supplementary benefit changes will be made by regulations. Subject to the passage of legislation the Government propose to bring in the extension to 13 weeks in October.

Christmas Bonus

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to review the £10 Christmas bonus for pensioners.

Mr. Newton: As I told Standing Committee B this morning, we shall shortly be laying before the House an order which provides for the payment of a Christmas bonus of £10 to pensioners and other qualifying beneficiaries in the week beginning Monday 1 December this year.

British Computer Industry

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Social Services to what extent Government procurement policy for statutory organisations within his responsibility, such as regional health authorities, takes account of the recommendations of the 1984 National Economic Development Council report relating to measures to secure the future and foster the growth of the British computer industry: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: We are aware of the recommended actions of the National Economic Development Council report but the National Health Service, like any other public body, is required to conduct its computer procurement exercises in a manner compatible with the United Kingdom's international obligations.

We are also seeking to encourage greater competitiveness and innovation among suppliers to the National Health Service and I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Hannam) on 25 March at columns 459-60.

Influenza Vaccines

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his current assessment of the efficacy of anti-influenza vaccines in the light of the latest assessment by the National Institute for Biological Standards and Control; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The functions of the National Institute for Biological Standards and Control in regard to influenza vaccines are to review the data provided by vaccine manufacturers on antibody response in recipients, and to evaluate the potency and strain composition of each batch of vaccine. Recommendations on the composition and use of influenza vaccines for the forthcoming winter are made each year by the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation and advice is given to the medical profession by the Chief Medical Officer as necessary in the light of the Committee's recommendations. Currently available influenza vaccines confer protection against infection for about a year after administration to about 70 per cent. of recipients.

Aging (Research)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total sum his Department has allocated for research into aging in each year since 1979; and what specific amounts he has allocated to the British Society for Research on Aging over the same period.

Mr. Whitney: We look to the Medical Research Council for research on the medical and related aspects of aging. The council is the main Government agency for the promotion of medical research and receives its grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science. The Economic and Social Research Council, which is similarly funded, supports research in the social field, including issues relating to elderly people. Research on aging is a priority area for the ESRC and in response to this 10 projects are in the process of being funded.

Details of research undertaken by or on behalf of the Department are contained in the DHSS "Handbook of Research and Development". The 1985 edition has recently been published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office. A copy has been placed in the Library. No research by the British Society for Research on aging has been financially supported by the Department either currently or, so far as can be ascertained, since 1979.

Benefits (School Leavers)

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) of he will detail the number of claims from those leaving school between the end of the spring term and 17 May 1985 detailing (a) the total number of claims, (b) the number successful, (c) the total number of school leavers paid benefit whose 16th birthday was after 31 January 1985 in England and Wales and 28 February 1985 in Scotland and (d) the total number of school leavers paid benefit after returning to school to undertake exams after the Easter holiday;

(2) if he will place in the Library a copy of the information gathered as requested in circular S/17/85.

Mr. Major: A special monitoring exercise was mounted between the end of the spring school term and 17 May 1985 to obtain the figures requested by the hon. Member at (b) to (d) of his question. The information required was on the number of successful claims to benefit: the total number of claims was not asked for and is not available. The figures are:

(b) 24,859
(c) 936
(d) 8,164

There is no other information which could be placed in the Library.

Calderstones and Brockhall Hospitals

Mr. Straw asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the proposals by the North-Western regional health authority as to the future of the Calderstones and Brockhall hospitals.

Mr. Whitney: The future of individual hospitals is a matter for the health authorities locally to decide. The hon. Member may therefore care to address his enquiry to the chairman of North-Western regional health authority.

Students (Benefits)

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he received the report of the Social Security Advisory Committee in connection with his proposals for changes to students' benefit entitlements; whether he intends to proceed with his proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

NHS (Management Objectives)

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy towards the inclusion by National Health Service unit general managers in documents setting out management objectives of clauses reserving the right to impose penalties on National Heath

Service staff who in the judgment of the unit general manager concerned, fail to meet those management objectives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 8 April 1986, c. 66]: There are no arrangements for the imposition of penalties on any National Health Service staff who fail to achieve management objectives. I understand this has been made clear to the unit general manager in the particular instance about which the hon. Member has sent me details.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Entrapment

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what guidelines he has issued to the Royal Ulster Constabulary concerning the use of entrapment in the detection or prevention of crime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The Secretary of State has not issued guidance to the RUC concerning entrapment. However paragraph 1.92 of the Home Office "Consolidated Circular on Crime and Kindred Matters" which has been issued to the RUC provides guidance to the effect that no members of a police force should counsel, incite or procure the commission of a crime. A copy of the consolidated circular is in the Library.

ENVIRONMENT

Nugee Report

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is now in a position to make a statement on the Nugee report on the management of privately-owned blocks of flats.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given on Tuesday, 8 April at columns 26-28 by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment to my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster North (Mr. Wheeler).

Houses in Multiple Occupation

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish the results of the survey commissioned by his Department of local authorities on houses in multiple occupation; whether he will place a copy in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: A summary of the results of the postal survey of local authorities in England and Wales about houses in multiple occupation was given on 20 February at a seminar held by the Institution of Environmental Health Officers. A full report on that survey will be published in May by HMSO, and a copy will be placed in the Library.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

General Certificate of Secondary Education

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from the Head Teachers' Association on the new general certificate of secondary education.

Mr. Chris Patten: My right hon. Friend has received representations from both the National Association of Head Teachers and the Secondary Heads Association about the preparations for, and funding of, the GCSE. I held meetings with both associations recently to discuss these issues. At their request, my right hon. Friend is to have a further meeting with the National Association of Head Teachers; he has also written to the Secondary Heads Association inviting further comment.

Lancashire

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the Lancashire county council education expenditure at outturn and constant prices in each year from 1979-80 to 1986-87; and what was the original bid received by his Department for each respective year.

Mr. Dunn: I assume that the hon. Member is concerned with capital expenditure. On that basis the information required is as follows:

Lancashire County Council
Prescribed capital expenditure on education

£ 000s

	Cash		Constant prices† (at 1984-85 prices)
	Bid	Expenditure	Bid	Expenditure

HOME DEPARTMENT

Young Offenders (Yorkshire and Humberside)

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to increase the capacity for young offenders in non-prison environments in Yorkshire and Humberside.

Mr. Mellor: In the medium term, there are schemes to provide small numbers of additional places at Her Majesty's detention centre New Hall and Her Majesty's youth custody centres Northallerton and Wetherby. In the longer term the major redevelopment programme at Her Majesty's prison Leeds, including the construction of some 450 new places, will enable us to provide further discrete remand centre accommodation for young offenders.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the additional cost of funding the new responsibilities that have been passed to (a) Middlesex, (b) north-east London, (c) south-east London, (d) south-west London, (e) the west midlands, (f) Merseyside, (g) Greater Manchester, (h) south

Yorkshire, (i) west Yorkshire and (j) Northumbria probation services following the abolition of the Greater London council and the six metropolitan counties.

Mr. Mellor: No new responsibilities have been passed to the probation committees in outer London and the metropolitan counties following the abolition of the Greater London council and the metropolitan county councils. The duty to defray the expenses of those committees now rest with the outer London borough councils and the metropolitan district councils.

The hon. Member may have in mind the need to make new arrangements for the provision of support services previously provided by the authorities which have been abolished. Any changes in the costs of support services after abolition cannot be measured, because the full cost of such services to those authorities is not known.

Mr. Steffan Webb

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of South Wales on the incident at Pontypridd on 19 April when Steffan Webb was injured by a vehicle carrying the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Wales, the hon. Member for Conwy (Mr. Roberts); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the chief constable that, as my hon. Friend the Member for Conwy (Mr. Roberts) was leaving the Polytechnic of Wales at Pontypridd last Saturday afternoon an incident occurred involving the vehicle in which he was travelling as a result of which a demonstrater, Mr. Webb, was reportedly injured. Any complaint made will of course be fully investigated.

Libyan Nationals

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) pursuant to the answer of 18 April, Official Report, column 512, what procedures are used to review the immigration status of Libyan trainee engineers and pilots studying in the United Kingdom; what factors are currently being taken into account in such reviews; and if she will make a statement;

(2) if he will list the criteria used in deciding to allow Libyan trainee engineers and pilots to enter the United Kingdom; what time limit and other conditions were attached to their stay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: Applications for leave to enter or remain are considered individually in accordance with the requirements of the immigration rules. Libyan nationals remain subject to the strict immigration controls announced by my right hon. and learned Friend the then Home Secretary on 1 May 1984 and all applications from them are subject to very close scrutiny. As my hon. Friend will be aware, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport has issued directions which will effectively prevent Libyan trainee engineers and pilots from completing their courses. Their current basis of stay therefore no longer exists and they will be expected to leave. My right hon. Friend will not hesitate to use his powers to curtail their stay or to initiate deportation action in appropriate cases, if they fail to leave voluntarily.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Monetary Compensatory Amounts

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the level of monetary compensatory amounts payable in each EEC country at the present time; and what information he has about extra payments being made by West Germany and other EEC countries to raise the return to their farmers.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Lancashire and Western Sea Fisheries

Mr. Onslow asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to ensure the protection of sea fisheries in the area covered by the Lancashire and Western Sea Fisheries Committee, following that body's decision to lay off its sea fishery officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Production Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing how the United Kingdom production of agricultural products subject to the common agricultural policy price compares with 1970-71 production levels.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

SCOTLAND

University Students (Community Charge)

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received concerning the implications of the Government's proposals for a community charge for students studying at Scottish universities and colleges.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a number of representations about the implications of the community charge for students, including seven responses from Scottish universities and central institutions to an invitation from the Scottish Education Department to comment on the operational issues involved.

Bus Services

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of (a) current Sunday services and (b) current services after 6 pm on weekdays have been registered as bus routes in Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: This information could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current size of the waiting list for treatment of all kinds of Scottish hospitals; and how this figure compares with those for April 1979 and April 1983.

Mr. John MacKay: The available information on cases for hospital in-patient treatment is as follows:

	Number
1979 (31 March)	76,616
1983 (31 March)	96,761
1984 (30 September)	82,937

The increase in existing lists caused by industrial action in 1982 is now being steadily reduced. Lists tend to overstate numbers of patients waiting for treatment, since they include duplicated entries and patients who no longer need treatment.

National Health Service Beds

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the ratio of National Health Service beds to population in Scotland; and how this compares with the figures for April 1979 and April 1983.

Mr. John MacKay: The ratio of National Health Service beds to population, expressed as average available staffed beds per 100,000 population, was 1,112 at 30 September 1984, the most recent date for which the information is available for Scotland as a whole. This compares with 1,106 at 31 March 1983 and 1,135 at 31 March 1979.

Hospital Closures

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hospitals have been closed in Scotland in each year since 1975; and if he will name them.

Mr. John MacKay: The information for the years prior to 1979 is not readily available. Since 1979 a total of 28 hospitals have ben closed and 42 major new hospital developments completed. The names of the hospitals closed are as follows:

1979—Seven Hospitals
- Broadstone Jubilee Hospital, Port Glasgow
- Duncan McPherson Hospital, Gourock
- Gateside Hospital, Greenock
- Greenock Eye Infirmary
- Greenock Royal Infirmary
- Dunbar Cottage Hospital
- Kings Cross (West) Hospital, Dundee

1980—Three Hospitals
- Shotts Hospital
- Charleton Maternity Home, Montrose
- Sidlaw Hospital, Auchterhouse

1981—Three Hospitals
- Carnbooth Children's Home, Glasgow
- Homoeopathic Hospital for Children, Glasgow
- Burghmuir Hospital, Perth

1982—Three Hospitals
- Kilmarnock Infirmary
- Torrance House, Kilmarnock
- Strathmore Hospital, Blairgowrie

1983—Four Hospitals
- Peebles County Hospital
- Peebles War Memorial Hospital
- Ear, Nose and Throat Hospital, Glasgow
- Brevik Hospital, Lerwick

1984—Four Hospitals
- Finnartmore Auxiliary Hospital, Kilmun
- Buckreddan Maternity Hospital, Kilwinning
- County Hospital, Dufftown
- Old Gilbert Bain Hospital, Lerwick

1985—Three Hospitals
- Calderwell House Hospital, Uplawmoor
- Northern Hospital Dunfermline
- Centre for Rheumatic Diseases

1986—One Hospital
- Broadfield Hospital, Port Glasgow

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Parrot Corporation

Mr. Abse asked the Attorney-General whether the findings of the Gwent police investigation into the affairs of the Parrot Corporation referred to the Director of Public Prosecutions have been reviewed; and whether any criminal proceedings are to be commenced.

The Attorney-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions has received a preliminary police report from the Gwent constabulary about their investigation into the affairs of the Parrot Corporation Limited and has provided advice as the lines of inquiry to be pursued. The director expects to receive a full report within about two months.

Personal Injury Litigation

Mr. Ashley asked the Attorney-General which organisations were issued with a copy of the consultation document on personal injury litigation; and if copies are available for organisations wishing to comment on the documents.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor's consultation paper on personal injuries litigation, published on 19 February, is the first consultation document to emerge from his current review of civil justice. Organisations which have received the paper directly are the 43 organisations listed. The paper is available on request from the Lord Chancellor's Department.

WALES

Holyhead (Bypass)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales what studies have been carried out by his Department into the provision of a bypass around the town of Holyhead, giving the dates and results of such studies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No studies have yet been undertaken into the provision of a bypass for Holyhead but if there is a case for including such a scheme in the future road programme, we will give it careful consideration.

Pig Industry

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has in mind to help the pig industry in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: No initiatives are planned for the pig industry. An EC scheme providing aid towards the private storage of pigmeat was introduced on 1 April 1986. The June 1985 census figures recorded an increase of 7·9 per cent. over June 1984 in the pig breeding herd in Wales, which now stands at 16,100 head, indicating a return of confidence in this sector.

Business Improvement Scheme

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales what account is taken of the level of unemployment, both in absolute terms and relative to other areas of Wales, when selecting areas for inclusion in the business improvement services scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The areas in Wales in which the provisions of the business improvement services scheme apply are the steel closure areas defined, by the Council of the European Communities, in Council regulation (EEC) No. 216/84 of 18 January 1984. The criteria used to select steel closure areas were: the number of jobs in the steel industry; the industrial employment dependent on the steel industry; major job losses in the steel industry in recent years; the eligibility of the zone concerned for a national regional aid scheme; the social and economic situation in the region assessed on the basis of per capita gross domestic product and structural unemployment.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what is the cost to public funds of subsidising guaranteed interest profits earned by the banks on loans to United Kingdom companies to back export sales where the deals are insured by the Export Credits Guarantee Department; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the current level of lending by banks under the scheme insured by the Export Credits Guarantee Department;

(3) what is the current level of guaranteed margin on loans for exports under schemes backed by the Export Credits Guarantee Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The cost to Her Majesty's Government of paying the interest margin over London interbank offer rate to the banks under the fixed rate export finance scheme depends on the level of the margin at any time and the amount of finance outstanding. In 1985-86, the cost was approximately £105 million (1984-85, £113 million). The level of lending under these schemes is currently £10·5 billion. The current level of the margin over LIBOR for sterling loans is ⅞ per cent. for the first 12 years of the credit and 1 per cent. thereafter. For foreign currency loans, the margins range from ⅞ per cent. for loans repayable within four years from signature to ¼ per cent. for loans repayable over more than 14 years.

The Government have notified the banks of their intention to review the remuneration received by them for providing fixed rate export finance. Detailed discussions with the banking associations will commence within the next month and are expected to lead to reduced margins payable on future business. A statement will be made at the appropriate time to report the outcome of these negotiations.

Export Credit

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action has been taken by the European Economic Commission to ensure that Article 92 of the Treaty of Rome is complied with in the light of information passed to the Commission about breaches of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development consensus on interest rates for export credit; what communication has been received by his Department from the European Economic Commission in this respect; what were the contents of that communication; and what action is proposed in response to it.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Commission recently inquired through the United Kingdom representative in Brussels about the United Kingdom's practice in this area. The information requested has been provided.

South Africa (Company Interests)

Mr. Fletcher asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which British companies have failed to respond under the European economic Community code of conduct for companies with interests in South Africa: and what action he proposes to take to persuade them to do so.

Mr. Alan Clark: This information is published in annex D to the Department's analysis and summary of companies' reports under the EC code, which was placed in the Library of the House prior to the Easter recess. We will remain in touch with the companies concerned and take every opportunity to urge them to reconsider their attitude and to report under the code. In the light of such efforts in the past, I am very pleased that the number of non-reporting companies has been steadily reduced; only three companies declined to submit returns in the last reporting period, compared with 10 a year earlier.

Ultraleisure

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when officials of the Export Credits Guarantee Department became aware of irregularities in the open account dealings by the directors of Ultraleisure; when it was realised that the credit limits approved by the Export Credit Guarantee Department for this company were inappropriate to its export turnover; and why no action was taken.

Mr. Alan Clark: Certain aspects of the involvement of this company with the Export Credits Guarantee Department are the subject of police investigation. In these circumstances it would be inappropriate for me to give the information requested.

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what communication, by telephone or otherwise, there has been between his officials and Mr. Robert Stapleton, a director of Ultraleisure and currently resident in Spain.

Mr. Alan Clark: I am not aware of any such communication since Mr. Stapleton has been resident in Spain.

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) why a decision was made on 20 November 1981 by a senior official of the Export Credit Guarantee Department to approve an 8·5 per cent. interest rate for financing Ultraleisure's export contracts to another European Economic Community country when this rate was in contravention of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development consensus rate; and when the relevant letter of commitment was issued by the bank involved;

(2) why the decision to approve an 8·5 per cent. interest rate for finance for Ultraleisure's export contracts was specifically made in respect of Ultraleisure's newly-formed Swiss subsidiary; and when was the last occasion on which this type of arrangement was permitted.

Mr. Alan Clark: This decision was made in accordance with ECGD's current policy at the time. The export contract in question was with a buyer in a non-EC country. Since the end of 1983, the Department has not supported OECD consensus rates of interest to finance any exports where it is known that their final destination is another EC country.

Export Licences

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has made to the United States Department of Commerce about the operation in the United Kingdom of the United States export licence system governing advanced systems; what evidence he has of this system being enforced in the United Kingdom by inspections by the United States authorities; if any co-operation is being offered by the United Kingdom authorities in this regard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Government have firmly put on record their objections of principle to the extra territorial claims implicit in the new US distribution licence regulations, both bilaterally and through the European Community. The US authorities have sought the Government's agreement to US officials visiting a number of British companies in connection with the regulations. My officials have been in touch with the companies concerned but no such visits have yet been approved. The Government are considering whether to agree to the proposed visits and if so on what terms.

ENERGY

Departmental Advertisement (Hoax)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Energy what was the cost of his Department's hoax advertisement published in national newspapers on 1 April; and if he will indicate what purpose it served; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: This advertisement was placed in The Times and Guardian at a cost of £18,000. It was one of a number of energy efficiency advertisements scheduled to appear in April and May. The advertisement was designed to gain public interest and jolt inertia.

Advertisements placed in these publications on April 1 are always likely to attract special attention and be closely read and the Department saw an opportunity to get extra value for its advertising spend. The advertisement attracted a significantly higher number of requests for energy efficiency information than is obtained on average in response to the Department's normal press advertisement.

PRIME MINISTER

Sports Clubs (Rates)

Mr. Cra[illegible] asked the Prime Minister what representations she has received concerning the rating of Scottish sports clubs and how this compares with the treatment of equivalent premises in England and Wales; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have received a small number of such representations in recent months, but a considerably larger number — over 70 — have been received by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland. The fact that the valuation and rating systems in Great Britain can lead to differences between clubs in Scotland and England and Wales of the kind mentioned in the representations is one of the reasons why the Government are getting on with the very difficult task of reforming local taxation. We intend to bring into effect as soon as possible our proposals in the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714). The paper explains the advantage we see in moving in time to a common non-domestic rate poundages in all areas, and suggests that it may be desirable to harmonise valuation procedures to provide for a common standard. Responses to the Green Paper on its Scottish aspects have been asked for by 31 July. All will be carefully considered. A further announcement of the Government's intentions will be made in due course.

Libyan Nationals

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister (1) if Her Majesty's Government have any plans to curtail the stay of all those Libyan trainee engineers and pilots currently studying in the United Kingdom; and if she will make a statement;

(2) if she is satisfied with the arrangements for dealing with the security implications of the presence in the United Kingdom of Libyan trainee engineers and pilots; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport has issued directions to all operators of aircraft registered or operating in the United Kingdom and to managers of certain aerodromes, which will prevent Libyan aviation engineering trainees from having access to aircraft except as passengers, and which will prevent Libyan pilot trainees from making solo flights. The effect of these measures will be that such trainees will be unable to complete their courses or obtain qualifications.

In that event their current basis of stay will no longer exist and they will be expected to leave. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department will not hesitate to use his powers to curtail their stay or initiate deportation action in approproate cases, if they fail to leave voluntarily.

Member's Correspondence

Mrs. Clare Short asked the Prime Minister when she intends to answer the letter of 27 March from the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood, about her policy towards pictures in newspapers of naked and partially naked women in sexually provocative poses; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I shall reply to the hon. Lady shortly.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Diplomats (Recall Subsistence)

Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the current scales and the scales for the previous three financial years for subsistence allowances for diplomats recalled for consultation to London.

Mr. Eggar: Members of Her Majesty's Diplomatic Service recalled for consultation to London are eligible to receive the standard rate subsistence allowance for each complete 24 hour period. The rates are fixed nationally by Her Majesty's Treasury and apply to all civil servants.

The current rates by category are:

	Subsistence classification
	1	2	3
With effect from 1 August 1985	£	£	£
Inner London	67·20	48·75	42·10
Elsewhere	56·30	40·70	31·85

The previous three years rates were:

	Subsistence classification
	1	2	3
With effect from 1 August 1984	£	£	£
Inner London	61·20	44·90	38·40
Elsewhere	50·65	36·75	29·15
With effect from 1 August 1983
Inner London	56·30	40·75	34·80
Elsewhere	48·10	34·15	27·20
With effect from 1 August 1982
Inner London	51·85	37·85	32·65
Elsewhere	41·90	32·65	25·95

Category Classification 1—Senior Grade to DS Grade 4.
2—DS Grade 5 to DS Grade 7D.
3—DS Grade 7E and below.

Argentina

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will now seek to re-establish diplomatic relations with Argentina; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: As I told the hon. Member for Fife, Central (Mr. Hamilton) on 9 April at column 164, we wish to move towards more normal relations with Argentina. We have taken numerous steps to achieve this.

TRANSPORT

A12 (Service Area)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport what applications have been made to develop a service area complex on the A12 near Brentwood; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I understand that Brentwood district council has recently received two such applications for planning permission, one in respect of each carriageway of the A12. The Department will be formally notifying the council of its response to the applications after considering any implications for the free and safe flow of trunk road traffic.

Motorways (Lancashire)

Mr. Dover asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has yet received the report of the consultants on the linking of the M65 and M1-M61 motorways in Lancashire.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. I shall make a further announcement when it has been considered.

Heathrow (Landing Times)

Mr. Higgins asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the earliest time in the morning at which scheduled aircraft are permitted to land at Heathrow; how many have arrived earlier in the last three months for which figures are readily available; and for what reasons.

Mr. Ridley: Heathrow airport is open to scheduled traffic at all times. Statutory limitations, however, are imposed which include quotas for the number and type of movements that may take place during specified periods at night. Full details of these limitations were set out in the then Department of Trade's press notice "Aircraft Noise at Heathrow and Gatwick" of 29 April 1981, a copy of which is in the Library. These limitations are strictly applied: as the quotas cover seasonable periods there is sufficient flexibility to ensure that they are not exceeded. Within the limitations, airlines are free to use the airport to meet their needs, and variations in the pattern of movements are possible.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Taxation

Mr. Straw asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish estimates of (a) value added tax, (b) domestic rates and (c) other indirect taxes paid by those on (i) 75 per cent., (ii) 100 per cent. and (iii) 150 per cent. of average earnings in 1986-87 and each of the previous eight years in the same form as his reply of 2 July 1985, Official Report, column 112; and if he will give the level of average earnings in each year.

Mr. Brooke: Estimates for the years 1978-79 to 1983-84 are in the following table. Estimates for 1984-85 to 1986-87 were included in the reply given to the hon. Member on 26 March 1986, Official Report, columns 530-36.

Notes to Table

1. Average earnings are taken to be the average gross weekly earnings of all full time males on adult rates with pay unaffected by absence. The levels of average earnings in each year are given below.

	£ per week
1978-79	92·80
1979-80	109·30
1980-81	131·40
1981-82	145·90
1982-83	157·40
1983-84	171·00

2. The married couple with both working is assumed to have joint earnings of the various multiples of average earnings. In calculating disposable income it is assumed that the joint earnings are split between husband and wife in the ratio 60:40.

3. The estimates are based on the illustrative assuption that 10 per cent. of disposable income is saved. They are derived fron the 1984 Family Expenditure Survey, but have been adjusted to reflect the effects of average changes in spending patterns over time.

4. The category 'other indirect taxes' covers central Government taxes only but includes the indirect effects of taxes levied on businesses.

European Monetary System

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the effect of recent currency revaluations in the European Monetary System on the 1986 budget approved by the EEC Council.

Mr. Brooke: The impact on the EC budget of the EMS realignment on 6 April is a highly complicated calculation affected by numerous variables and uncertainties. Only the Commission is in a position to make a detailed assessment. The Commission services have suggested that agricultural expenditure, at current green rates may increase by up to 333 million ecu in 1986 as a result of the realignment. No estimate has been made by the Commission of the effect on other areas of expenditure or on own resources revenues.

Wilfred Aspinwall

Mr. Pawsey asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will reply to the letters dated 4 December, 6 March and 11 April from the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth referring to Wilfred Aspinwall of the Managerial Professional and Staff liaison group.

Mr. MacGregor: My office has no record of receiving either of my hon. Friend's letters of 4 December or 6 March. I received his letter of 11 April on 14 April.

I understand he offered on 23 April to send copies of the two earlier letters to the Treasury's correspondence unit. Once we have all three letters, he will receive a prompt reply.

Currency Markets

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the use of forward cover in respect of Government orders placed abroad, in the light of volatile movements in the currency markets.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Government Department may reduce their exposure to exchange risk in relation to future payments or receipts by using forward markets where this is practicable. This is subject to the rules set out in section N (paragraphs 110 to 114) of Government Accounting, a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library.

Capital Taxation

Mr. Frank Field asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the revenue gained from (a) capital transfer tax and (b) capital gains tax for each year since 1979 and the total gained in revenue for both these taxes over this period of time, in real and cash terms.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 21 April 1986, c. 38]: Estimates of liabilities to capital transfer tax on transfers, and capital gains tax on disposals, in each year are as follows:

DEFENCE

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many nuclear weapons tests British Governments have conducted since the signing of the partial test ban treaty in 1963.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The relevant treaty signed in 1963 was the limited test ban treaty. Since its signing, the United Kingdom has conducted 16 nuclear weapons tests. These were carried out in collaboration with the United States and the conditions of the treaty were honoured in full.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he is satisfied with the working efficiency and capability of the United Kingdom's nuclear weapons capacity.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Yes.

Water Tank, Walker Drive, South Queensferry

Mr. Tam Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the state of repair of the water tank, the property of his Department, at Walker drive, South Queensferry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I shall answer shortly.

US Personnel and Equipment

Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the cost to the United Kingdom taxpayer of providing the equivalent defence capability were the United States of America to withdraw all United States personnel and equipment from its bases within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Stanley: The cost would be enormous. I regret that an actual estimate on the basis requested by my hon. Friend could be provided only at disroportionate cost.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Shore asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many nuclear tests were undertaken by the United Kingdom in each year since 1980; and how many similar tests were undertaken by the United States of America, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, France and China.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The United Kingdom has undertaken a total of nine nuclear tests since 1 January 1980—all in co-operation with the United States. They comprised three in 1980, one in each of 1981, 1982, 1983, two in 1984 and one in 1985. Details of tests carried out by other countries should be sought from them.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Board and Lodging Allowances

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in Burnley were receiving board and lodging allowances at the latest date for which figures are available; and how many were under 25 years of age.

Mr. Major: I assume the hon. Member is referring to claims from people in ordinary board and lodging accommodation and hostels. The latest available information relates to the period 29 April 1985 to 28 July 1985 when some 600 claims, including 260 from those aged 25 and under, were assessed or reassessed by the local office in Burnley under the revised boarder rules.

This special count was not maintained beyond that period.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the current staff levels at his Department's Burnley offices; and what were comparable figures at yearly intervals since 1979.

Mr. Major: The complement for Burnley intergrated local office at April for the years 1979-85 is set out in the table. Figures for staff actually in post at these times are not now available.

Year	Complement
1979	240
1980	235
1981	228
1982	214
1983	194
1984	195
1985	203

The complement for April 1986 is yet to be established. On 1 April 1986 there were 208·5 staff in post.

NHS Staff (Accommodation)

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy on the provision of residential accommodation for National Health Service staff.

Mr. Fowler: The NHS estate in England includes over 100,000 units of residential accommodation for staff. This includes thousands of individual houses, flats and other accommodation, as well as large nurses' homes, and similar buildings.

A study showed that some 20 per cent. of this accommodation was standing empty, and that most health authorities had more accommodation than they needed. I have therefore asked health authorities to re-examine their holdings of residential accommodation and make plans to dispose of property which is surplus to requirements.

First, health authorities will be able to dispose of vacant property which is no longer needed. I should emphasis that the resources released will br retained for the benefit of the National Health Service. Land and property sales are expected to total around £130 million this year. All of this is ploughed back into the Health Service. A priority use of these funds will be to improve and modernise nurses' homes and other staff accommodation which is needed.

Second, in considering what property they need to retain in the long term, health authorities should provide accommodation, as needed, for certain professional trainees—particularly junior doctors and student nurses and for other staff in appropriate circumstances such as in inner city areas.

Third, where staff are living in accommodation that the NHS does not need to retain, they will be given the right to buy at discounted rates. The terms, as for local authority tenants, are very favourable. At present, this means discounts of up to 60 per cent. off market values.

Let me emphasise this is not a policy of eviction. The policy of rationalising the health service's holdings of residential accommodation will be so administered that no one who lives in such accommodation will be made homeless as a result. No one will be required to move from their present accommodation as part of this policy without being offered a suitable alternative place to live. Overall the policy will provide accommodation for staff who need it while at the same time releasing resources for the development of the health service.

Aspartame

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what discussions have taken place between officials of his Department and the relevant United States authorities about Dr. Wurtman's data on the use of aspartame and its alleged side-effects;

(2) if he will instruct Her Majesty's Ambassador in Washington to seek to obtain a transcript of the forthcoming Congressional hearing on the procedure followed in the original approval of aspartame for use as a food additive in the United States of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: In 1983, the Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment considered data sent by Dr. Wurtman to the United States of America Food and Drugs Administration. In 1985 it considered the report of the United States Centers for Disease Control's review of suspected adverse reactions to aspartame. Neither of these reviews caused the COT to change its view that aspartame is safe for use in food and drink.

I am informed that some further data from Dr. Wurtman have recently been provided to the Food and Drugs Administration. It is too soon for a full evaluation of these to have taken place. The Department's professional staff has well-established arrangements with counterparts in the United States of America and other countries to ensure exchange of scientific informaton on the safety of food additives. Any relevant new informaton would be reviewed by our expert advisers. This would include reports of any Congressional hearings which consider scientific data relevant to the safety of aspartame.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on Government policy on invalidity care allowance following the opinion of the Advocate-General of the European Court that married women should be eligible to receive invalid care allowance.

Mr. Newton: The judgment of the European Court on the application of the EC Equal Treatment Directive to invalid care allowance is not expected until June. The Advocate-General gave his opinion to the court on 22 April. This opinion is not binding, but we are of course considering the position carefully in the light of it.

Family Credit

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate how much of the cash compensation for free school meals and free welfare milk included in the family credit payment under his proposals in Cmnd. 9691 is lost through reduced housing benefit entitlement for a married couple with one, two and three children and a lone parent with one, two and three children at gross earnings levels of (a) £60 per week, (b) £70, (c) £80, (d) £90 and (e) £100 and so on until entitlement to family credit is extinguished in each case.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services at what level of gross income entitlement to housing benefit will cease, assuming that family credit is claimed where appropriate under his proposals in Cmnd.

9691 on the same basis as his reply of 24 January to the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East, Official Report, column 345-6.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give a breakdown on the geographical deployment of the additional 5,000 staff which he recently announced.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 21 April 1986, c. 85]: The increased allocation of local office staff for the 1 April 1987 manpower target announced by my right hon. Friend on 7 March at column 322 will be distributed as follows:

Region	Number
North East	559
Midlands	847
London North	858
London South	1,004
Wales/South West	442

EMPLOYMENT

Fishing Industry

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General if he will seek to convene a meeting of fishing vessel owners and employees with a view to agreeing on a decasualisation scheme for the fishing industry.

Mr. Trippier: I do not believe it would be helpful to do so. There is no indication that the two sides of the industry are prepared to agree such a scheme.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General what is his estimate of the number of trawlermen made redundant in each of the years 1976 to 1984, the average earnings of trawlermen in each of those years, the number of employed trawlermen in each year and the amount paid into the redundancy fund in each of those years on behalf of employed trawlermen.

Mr. Trippier: I regret that the information requested is not available: the various statistics referred to do not distinguish sufficiently between trawlermen and other employees.

Self-employed Persons

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will list for each region the numbers of self-employed, by industrial and occupational category for men and women for the years 1975 to 1985.

Mr. Lang: Information is not available in the exact form requested.

The regular quarterly self employment series is classified according to region and industry division, for June of certain years. The available information is presented in tables 1 and 2. The series is not classified by occupation or cross-classified by region and industry.

The labour force survey provides information on a different basis, but allows an analysis by occupation. The available information, relating to years in which the survey has been carried out since 1981, is given in table 3.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 28 April 1986

PRIME MINISTER

Wars and Military Conflicts

Mr. Mason asked the Prime Minister (1) if she will update the list of wars and military conflicts and the estimate of the numbers who have lost their lives as a result of such conflicts, which she undertook to place in the Library in 1982, Official Report, 28 June 1982, column 219;

(2) what information she has as to how many military conflicts have taken place in the world since 1956 involving specifically the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the Warsaw pact, the United States of America, the United Kingdom and the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation, stating the estimated loss of life in each conflict.

The Prime Minister: In my answer of 28 June 1982 to the right hon. Member I drew on information provided as a result of academic research and official estimates. I regret that updated material is not readily available in the forms requested and could now only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Unemployment (Government Measures)

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Prime Minister if she will list all Government measures passed, since taking office in 1979, to help the unemployed and to alleviate unemployment; and if she will also evaluate the overall cost of these measures.

The Prime Minister: Since 1979 we have introduced a range of measures to help the unemployed, and to provide training for both employed and unemployed people. We have also modified and improved a number of measures which were in place when we came to office. The measures are: community programme; enterprise allowance scheme; job release scheme; job clubs; job search scheme; job splitting scheme; jobstart allowance; restart programme; new workers scheme; part time job release scheme; young workers scheme; Community Industry; voluntary projects programme; YTS; job training scheme; training for enterprise; wider opportunities training programme; training grants for employers; Open Tech programme; access to information technology; career development loans.

Expenditure on our employment and training measures in cash terms from 1979 to the end of this financial year will be in the region of £13 billion. Our current range of employment, enterprise and training measures is described in the recently published booklet "Action for Jobs".

United States Bases

Mr. Best asked the Prime Minister if she will seek to negotiate a new formal agreement between the United Kingdom and the United States of America as to the circumstances in which United Kingdom military facilities may be used by the United States; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. The Government are satisfied with the existing understandings which, as recent events have demonstrated, work well.

Sefton Asbestos Fibre Experts

Mr. Alan Roberts asked the Prime Minister if she will answer the letter she has received from Sefton Asbestos Fibre Experts concerning the advice she gave it to contact a small firms centre; and if she will make a statement about the functioning of the small firms centres.

The Prime Minister: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Employment is writing to the hon. Member.

Libya

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister whether, in discussions with representatives of the United States Government prior to the recent attack upon Libya, it was made clear that one of the main objectives was the elimination of Colonel Gaddafi and his headquarters.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to him on 24 April at column 421.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Prime Minister at what precise time on what date she gave her formal agreement to President Reagan for the use of air bases in the United Kingdom for the attack on Libya; whether she at any time prior to giving her formal agreement indicated her provisional approval; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to my statement in the House on 15 April and my speech in the debate on 16 April.

Public Bodies (Appointments)

Ms. Harman asked the Prime Minister what proportion of those who are appointed by Her Majesty's Government to public bodies are from ethnic minorities.

The Prime Minister: I regret that this information is not available and could only be collected at disproportionate cost. Ministers appoint people from all sections of the community to public bodies on the basis of their ability to contribute to the work of those bodies. Departments do not keep records of the ethnic origins of those appointed to public bodies.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Justices of the Peace

20. Mr. Alton asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the criteria he uses for appointment to the post of justice of the peace within the Duchy of Lancaster.

Mr. Tebbit: Acting on the advice of my advisory committees, I seek to appoint as magistrates those who are personally suitable in character, integrity and sensitivity and who are generally recognised as such by those among whom they live and work. They should be capable of comprehending and adopting a balanced approach to evidence and argument. Subject to these considerations, I also aim to appoint magistrates such that the bench as a whole broadly reflects the make-up of the local community.

ENERGY

Coal Stocks

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give the figures of coal stocks for each of the last five years up to the most recent date, specifying the stock levels in each area of the National Coal Board.

Mr. David Hunt: The national figures for undistributed coal stocks over the last five years are:

	million tonnes
1980-81	20·9
1981-82	24·9
1982-83	25·0
1983-84	21·0
1984-85	19·0

More detailed figures are a matter for the National Coal Board.

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the implications of the current level of production of North sea gas, the fall in oil prices and the availability of cheap foreign coal for (a) the ability of the National Coal Board to meet its target for financial break-even and (b) for the board's investment programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: It is still too early to judge the likely extent and duration of the recent sharp deline in oil prices which together with imported coal and other fuels have increased the competitive pressure on the National Coal Board. It is therefore too soon to assess the implications for the NCB's target of break-even next year and for the Board's longer tem investment programme.

Opencast Coal

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Energy what are the annual production figures for each of the last five years of opencast coal mining; whether he will now take steps to curtail the output of opencast coal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Annual production figures for opencast coal mining over the past five years have been:

	million tonnes
1980-81	15·3
1981-82	14·3
1982-83	14·7
1983-84	13·8
1984-85	13·6

The output for 1985-86 is 14·1 m.t. (provisional only).

The level of future opencast coal production is for the NCB to determine in the light of market requirements and the acceptability of individual projects as determined by the planning system.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Family Planning

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many requests have been received from African Governments for assistance to national family planning projects since August 1984; what are the countries concerned; and how many such requests have been granted.

Mr. Eggar: We have received and approved requests from the Governments of Malawi, Nigeria and Zimbabwe (two specific requests).

Development Council

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the European Community Development Council on 17 April.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development represented the United Kingdom. Discussion at the Council centred on the immediate and longer-term prospects for Africa. The Commission reported on the rehabilitation plan for countries affected by famine in 1985 which had been approved by the Council last November; and was commended for the speed with which the programme was being carried out and the high degree of consultation with member states. The Council welcomed a Commission initiative for a co-ordinated and systematic approach to the problems of environmental degradation in Africa, and invited the Commission to consider with member states how it should be put into effect; and discussed the European Community's approach to the forthcoming Special Session of the United Nations General Assembly on Africa.

The Council considered the need for reforms in the Community's food aid programme to make it more responsive to emergencies and to increase its effectiveness as an instrument of development. The Commission was asked to bring forward proposals for changes to the relevant Community regulations as soon as possible.

The Council reviewed briefly recent progress in applying food strategies in four African countries; in programming the resources available under the third Lomé convention; in promoting the trade of aid recipient countries; and in giving effect to its previous conclusions on the role of women in development.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Juries (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Mallon asked the Attorney-General (1) what proposals the Lord Chancellor's office has prepared to abolish the use of civil juries in personal injuries cases in the High Court of Northern Ireland; and when he intends to publish them;

(2) if the Lord Chancellor's office has had any consultations with the Executive Council of the Bar in Northern Ireland in relation to the continued use of civil juries in personal injury cases in Northern Ireland;

(3) if the Lord Chancellor's office has had any consultations with the Law Society for Northern Ireland in relation to the continued use of civil juries in personal injury cases in Northern Ireland;

(4) if the Lord Chancellor's office has had any consultations with the Northern Committee of the Irish Congress of Trade Unions in relation to the continued use of civil juries in personal injury cases in Northern Ireland;

(5) if the Lord Chancellor's office has had any consultations with the Confederation of British Industry in Northern Ireland in relation to the continued use of civil juries in personal injury cases in Northern Ireland;

(6)if the Lord Chancellor's office has had any consultations with insurance companies in relation to the continued use of civil juries in personal injury cases in Northern Ireland;

(7) if the Lord Chancellor's office has had any consultations with the Institute of Directors in Northern Ireland in relation to the continued use of civil juries in personal injury cases in Northern Ireland.

The Attorney-General: Detailed representations have been received from all of the organisations mentioned in these questions except the Institute of Directors, but no proposals have yet been drawn up and it is too early to say if and when publication will take place.

Legal Aid

Mr. Frank Field asked the Attorney-General what estimate he has made of the proportion of the adult population which now qualifies for civil legal aid.

The Attorney-General: It is estimated that approximately 70 per cent. of households fall within the qualifying limits for civil legal aid.

Mr. Brian Gentleman

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Attorney-General whether any action is being or has been taken against Mr. Brian Gentleman following disclosures of his contact with the Czech military attaché and the suggestion that he passed to him classified information.

The Attorney-General: I understand that the matters to which the hon. Member refers are the subject of an investigation by the Metropolitan police who will submit a report to the Director of Public Prosecutions when their enquiries have been completed.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Actifed

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will compare the cost of 100 actifed tablets with the cost of the alternative prescription of 100 actidil tablets and 100 sudafed tablets; if he will state the net cost to the Government, after taking into account the two prescription charges paid; and what was the net cost of supplying actifed in the 12 months leading up to the introduction of the limited list.

Mr. Hayhoe: The current manufacturers' prices are as follows:

100 Actifed tablets	4·86
100 Actidil tablets	4·70
100 Sudafed tablets	4·40

Where the patient is not exempt from prescription charges, the cost to the National Health Service of any item prescribed, exclusive of the dispensing and administrative costs, is offset by £2·20 from 1 April 1986. In the year 1984-85 the cost of actifed tablets to the NHS, net of income from prescription charges, was £373,600.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what study he has made of the rule imposing an abatement of unemployment benefit suffered by men between the ages of 60 and 65 years who are made redundant during that time but have small levels of income from occupational pensions; and what would be the cost to the Exchequer of abolishing the rule.

Mr. Newton: The abatement provision applies to occupational pensioners aged 60 or over who have their unemployment benefit reduced by 10p for each 10p of their occupational pension in excess of £35 a week, whether they have been made redundant or taken early retirement and whether these events took place before or after the claimant reached age 60. The Department has not carried out any specific studies into the effect of this rule.

It is estimated that the cost of abolishing the rule would be around £41 million in the first full year, although this would reduce to about £28 million in a year. The higher cost in the first year is because there are many occupational pensioners who have not claimed unemployment benefit from April 1981 onwards, because it would have been extinguished, but who could claim and get up to a year's benefit if abatement ceased to apply.

In Vitro Fertilisation and Embryology

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if his Department has received a report of the work of the Voluntary Licensing Authority for Human In Vitro Fertilisation and Embryology; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: My Department has noted with interest the first annual report of this body, which has been set up by the Medical Research Council and the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists.

Keeble Report

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consideration his Department has given to Mrs. Ursula Keeble's report entitled "Provision of Aids and Adaptations for Hospital Patients Discharged into their Own Home", a copy of which has been sent to him; if there is any action he will be taking arising from the report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The report bears on complex issues which are currently under consideration within the Department.

Judicial Reviews

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the number of judicial reviews in which his Department has been involved since 1 March 1974; and on how many occasions the court of final recourse has found against him.

Mr. Major: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Amputees (Chiropody Services)

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on his policy towards the provision of National Health Service and other chiropody services for amputees; and if he will specify how his policy applies to each different category of amputee.

Mr. Newton: Handicapped people, including amputees of whatever category, are recognised as one of the priority groups for receiving National Health Service chiropody treatment.

For war pensioners, when NHS chiropody services cannot be provided, the Department meets the cost of private treatment for any foot condition that results from the disablement for which the war pension is being paid. Under these arrangements, leg amputees can receive private treatment for their remaining foot because of the abnormal stress and strain to which it is subjected. Arm amputations do not of themselves entitle war pensioners to private chiropody but this policy is being reviewed.

Pest Advisory Service

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current annual cost of his Department's pest advisory service; how many people are working within it; what are their professional qualifications; and if he will give its role and responsibilities.

Mr. Hayhoe: The remit of the Department's pest control advisory service is outlined in Health Notice HN(76)186. This service is provided, in the main, by two officers — one a fellow of the Institution of Medical Laboratory Technology and the other a qualified environmental health officer—as part of their duties in the Hotel and Dietetics Services Branch. It is not possible to separately identify the cost of the pest control advisory service.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people have taken part in the training courses run by his Department's pest control advisory service; and how many people per National Health Service hospital this represents.

Mr. Hayhoe: Since 1979, 384 officers from 155 health authorities in England have attended these training courses. With possible changes in the circumstances of these officers and in the number of hospitals, it is not possible to draw a meaningful ratio of trained staff per hospital.

NHS (Pest Control)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to provide central monitoring of the level of pest infestation and the expenditure on methods to prevent it within the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: There are no plans to provide central monitoring of pest infestation within the National Health Service. It is the responsibility of health authorities to establish effective procedures for monitoring their premises calling upon professional advice as necessary.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what figures are available on the level of expenditure on pest control in the National Health Service;

(2) on how many occasions his Department has been told that an operating theatre has had to be closed because of pest infection.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that this information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will instruct all general managers to identify a person in their authority to take responsibility for pest control and to take steps to ensure that the appointed person takes the training course run by his Department's pest advisory control service.

Mr. Hayhoe: These matters are being considered in the context of the revised guidance on food hygiene and pest control in the National Health Service, which is at present in preparation.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what evidence he has regarding the incidence of severe pest infestation in hospitals; and what was the source of the evidence.

Mr. Hayhoe: The latest information available on the incidence of Pharaoh's ants in National Health Service Hospitals in England indicated that 11·6 per cent. of hospitals surveyed were infested. These figures are taken from: Edwards J. P. and Baker L. F., 1981, "Distribution and importance of the Pharaoh's ant Monomorium pharonis (L) in National Health Service Hospitals in England", Journal of Hospital Infection 2, 249-254. There is no information on the prevalence of other pest species in National Health Service hospitals, but I am aware of the concern expressed by the British Pest Control Association in its publication "Hospitals Can Damage Your Health" published last year.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many surveys of pest infestation in hospitals have been carried out by his Department's pest advisory service either alone or in conjunction with other agencies; what was the nature of the surveys; what were the findings and the recommendations; and if he will place the surveys in the Library;

(2) how many hospitals have been visited in the last year by members of his Department's pest control advisory service; if the advisory service makes unsolicited visits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Since 1976, the Department's pest control advisers have carried out 73 surveys at the request of individual health authorities, including 20 visits in the past year. The findings and recommendations relate to the needs of individual hospitals and I do not therefore consider it appropriate to place them in the Library. Unsolicited visits are not made.

Waiting Times

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list for each area authority in the country the waiting time for admission for each medical and surgical specialty since 1979.

Mr. Whitney: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member the information he seeks. The numbers in the central data sample are too small for reliable estimates to be made below regional level.

Industrial Disease (Compensation)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many people have been awarded payments for industrial disease in the National Health Service in each of the last five years; what is the incidence per thousand workers; and how this compares with the incidence in non Crown premises;

(2) how many industrial accidents have occurred in National Health Service hospitals in each of the last five years; what is the rate per thousand workers; and how this compares with the rate in non Crown premises.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret this information is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Community Psychiatric Nurses

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his answer, Official Report, column 28, 21 April, how many community psychiatric nurses are employed in England and Wales; how this figure compares with the figures for each of the past seven years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that I cannot give the hon. Member the information he seeks for the earlier years: prior to 1981 the occupation coding systems did not enable these staff to be identified. Figures for 30 September 1984 are the latest centrally available to this level of detail. Corresponding figures for Wales are also shown in the table:

Community psychiatric nursing staff

At 30 September	*Whole-time equivalents England	Wales
1981	1,080	80
1982	1,240	80
1983	1,430	140
1984	1,880	140

Sources: DHSS Annual Census of Non-Medical Manpower; Welsh Office

*All figures rounded to nearest 10.

As regards the future, information so far available from regions' strategic plans suggests the number will more than double by 1994.

Spectacles

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to privatise the supply of spectacles by National Health Service hospitals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: At present hospital eye service (HES) patients may choose to buy the spectacles they need on the private market, or to have National Health Service glasses and pay the statutory charges. Interested bodies are being consulted about proposed arrangements for these patients when the current range of NHS frames and lenses ceases to be available on 1 July. It is proposed that, in general, these patients will be able to obtain their spectacles either at the hospital at the full economic cost or on the private market. Vouchers to provide them with basic spectacles to meet their clinical needs will be available to those who at present benefit from arrangements for exemption or remission of NHS charges. Patients requiring particularly expensive complex lenses will continue to be able to receive them through the HES for payment of a NHS charge.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to remove the current entitlement to free National Health Service spectacles for children and low income groups; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: When the voucher scheme is introduced on 1 July all children and others at present entitled to free supply of National Health Service spectacles will instead receive a voucher.

The range of vouchers will be set at levels intended to allow basic spectacles suitable to a patient's clinical need to be purchased from the much wider choice available on the private market.

Volunteer Programme

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many young people are currently on the volunteer programme; what proportion of the supplementary benefit rate for a single young person the allowance paid to the volunteers represents; and how much the allowance is.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that statistics of the age of volunteers participating in the opportunities for volunteering scheme are not available. It is a condition of the scheme that any out-of-pocket expenses and allowances paid by local voluntary projects to volunteers must be such that they do not affect entitlement to social security benefits. The supplementary benefit disregard is £4 a week.

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what criteria have to be satisfied before an organisation is eligible to administer a scheme under the volunteer programme; and how many such organisations are running programmes;

(2) how many representations he has received about the present limits of the volunteer programme; and if he has any plans to extend the scope of it.

Mr. Whitney: Grants under the opportunities for volunteering scheme may be made by 16 national voluntary organisations — 15 "specialist" organisations and a consortium led by the Volunteer Centre and the National Council for Voluntary Organisations — which act as agents for an agreed range of local voluntary projects enabling unemployed people to participate in voluntary work in the health and personal social services. About 700 such projects are current at any time.

The scheme was relaunched with some changes at the beginning of April following a review in which those concerned were consulted. The changes have been generally welcomed and we have no plans to consider further changes before some experience of the new arrangements has been gained.

I have placed a copy of the Notes for Applicants for Grants 1986-87, which outlines the scheme, in the Library.

AIDS

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cases of acquired immune deficiency syndrome have been reported (a) in Birmingham and (b) in the rest of the west midlands region from January 1980 to the most recent date for which this information is available.

Mr. Hayhoe: Up to the end of March 1986, 328 cases of acquired immune deficiency syndrome had been reported to the Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre. These may be broken down into geographical areas as follows:

	Number
Thames Regions	264
Wessex and S. Western	21
Other Regions: Midlands and the North	29
Wales	6
Scotland	6
N. Ireland	2

It is not possible to provide a more detailed breakdown of the location of these cases without endangering patient confidentiality.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many extra young people aged (a) 16 years, (b) 17 years and (c) 18 years he estimates were eligible for supplementary benefit in 1985 and are eligible in 1986 following the decision of the Tribunal of Commissioners R(F) 2/85.

Mr. Major: A total of approximately 52,000 young people left school at Easter 1985 but the number who had exams to take and who might have been eligible to claim supplementary benefit following Commissioners' decision R(F) 2/85 is unknown. However, 24,859 young people successfully claimed benefit and 8,164 of these still had exams to take. No breakdown by age is available. There are no figures yet available for 1986.

Community Nurses

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make a statement on the incidence of violent attacks on community nurses.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that data are not held centrally about the incidence of violent attacks on National Health Service staff in hospitals or in the community. The Government are concerned about the increase of violence towards NHS staff and a working party of the Health Services Advisory Committee is currently looking at this issue. They are conducting a survey in a sample of health districts and a full report is expected in the summer. Regional health authorities have, meanwhile, been asked to review the problem and the measures they are taking to combat it.

Much is already being done to improve staff safety and security. In addition to the existing health authorities' safety codes which are being continually reviewed, all health authorities were asked to develop security strategies and all have done so. A security manual published by the National Association of Health Authorities which provides detailed advice on all aspects of security was commended to health authorities in 1984.

"Diet, Nutrition and Health"

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he plans any changes in policy in the light of the report "Diet, Nutrition and Health" produced by the Board of Science and Education of the British Medical Association, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. McCrindle) on 25 March at columns 458-9.

Students (Benefits)

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he received the report of the Social Security Advisory Committee in connection with his proposals for changes to students' benefit entitlement; whether he intends to proceed with his proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 24 April 1986, c. 244]: The report was reviewed towards the end of last month. We are considering the committee's views, along with those of the local authority associations, and will make an announcement in due course.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Higher Education

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions he has had in the last month with the National Advisory Body and the University Grants Committee about the future of higher education.

Mr. Walden: Since the beginning of January my right hon. Friend has written one letter to NAB and has attended one meeting of the NAB committee. He has also written jointly to the chairmen of the UGC, the NAB board and the Welsh Advisory Board, about student numbers in 1987-88. He has had no other correspondence or meetings with the UGC.

School Buildings

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received about the state of buildings in schools.

Mr. Dunn: The state of school buildings was discussed at the February meeting of NEDC which my right hon. Friend attended. Representations on the subject have also been made to my right hon. Friend and me by hon. Members and others.

Nursery Education

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the availability of nursery education.

Mr. Dunn: None.

School Financing

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to extend the discretion of heads and governing bodies of schools with regard to financing.

Mr. Dunn: As part of its provisions for improving the management of schools, the Education Bill currently before Parliament will give governing bodies and head teachers significant powers in respect of finance.

In-vitro Fertilisation and Embryology

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much was provided from public funds for the Voluntary Licencing Authority for Human In-Vitro Fertilisation and Embryology during 1985-86; and what are the estimated funds for 1986-87.

Mr. Walden: I cannot at present give a precise answer. The Voluntary Licensing Authority for Human In-Vitro Fertilisation and Embryology was set up jointly by the Medical Research Council (MRC) and the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists (RCOG). I understand from the MRC that the total cost of the authority in 1985-86 was £82,000; and that the total cost for 1986-87 is estimated to be £79,000. The RCOG has agreed to pay a share of these costs, as yet undetermined.

Free School Meals

Mr. Pendry asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to how many local education authorities in England are using their powers under the Education Act 1980 to restrict free school meals to those children whose parents receive supplementary benefit or family income supplement.

Mr. Dunn: In October 1985, there were 30 authorities restricting the provision of free school meals to those pupils whose parents were in receipt of supplementary benefit or family income supplement.

Judicial Reviews

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the number of judicial reviews in which his Department has been involved since 1 March 1974; and on how many occasions the court of final recourse has found against him.

Sir Keith Joseph: Particulars are only readily available for the period since 1 January 1982. Since that date I have been involved in 33 applications for judicial review. In 11 of these the court has granted relief to the applicants, and in three I have submitted to judgment. The total of 33 includes five cases in which the court has granted leave, but the substantive hearing has not yet taken place. Particulars for the period from 1 March 1974 to 31 December 1981 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Natural History Museum

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the current level of funding for the Natural history museum.

Mr. Walden: In the financial year 1986-87, the provision made in Supply Estimates for the British Museum (Natural History) is £17·2 million. This sum includes estimated expenditure on its behalf of £5·4 million by the Property Services Agency.

Plant Breeding Institute

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland, Official Report, 17 April, column 437, he will specify the advantages which he anticipates will result from the bringing together of the breeding and marketing of Plant Breeding Institute varieties; and what precise contributions to the future single organisation is envisaged from research funded by his Department.

Mr. Walden: On the first part of the question, one major advantage will be that receipts from sales will be available directly to finance further breeding work. On the second part, I cannot yet say. This will depend on the form of the privatisation, if it proceeds.

School Curriculum

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his reply of 25 March, Official Report, column 400, when he expects to publish the draft series of statement of broadly agreed objectives for different subjects taught in schools.

Sir Keith Joseph: My reply of 25 March to the hon. Member—column 400—made clear that we intend to issue in the near future a draft of the next statement in this series, the first of which "Science 5-16" was published in March 1985. Further statements will follow in due course, and after appropriate consultations.

Capital Expenditure Allocations

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report, for each local education authority, his Department's education capital expenditure allocation at outturn and at constant prices in each year from 1981-82 to 1986-87; and what were the original bids received by his Department for each year.

Mr. Dunn: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Police (Co-operation)

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if any guidance is to be given to local education authorities and schools about closer co-operation with the police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The police have a valuable contribution to make in our schools on road safety, crime prevention, law and order and in explaining their role. Most schools welcome the police but some do not and I greatly deprecate this. It means that their pupils are deprived of the help and advice which the police can offer them and a valuable opportunity is being lost for developing a better understanding between young people and the police.

A discussion document on effective co-operation between the schools and police has been prepared jointly by the Association of Chief Police Officers and the Society of Education Officers. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department and I welcome this initiative. Copies are being sent today to all local education authorities in England for distribution to individual schools and separate arrangements are being made for Welsh schools. Copies are also being sent to independent schools. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department is arranging for distribution to all police forces in England and Wales.

I am arranging for a copy to be placed in the Library.

WALES

Pit Closures

3. Mr. Ray Powell asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many pits have been closed in Wales since March 1985; how many jobs have been lost as a consequence and how many alternative jobs have been provided within the communities affected; and if he will make a statement detailing the Government's plans to secure alternative employment for redundant miners.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Since March 1985, nine pits in Wales have been closed. The overall South Wales coalfield manpower has fallen by 6,094 as a result of these closures and other rationalisations. In the two counties principally affected, Mid Glamorgan and Gwent, 321 projects promising 8,553 jobs have accepted offers of regional assistance or been allocated Government factories during 1985-86.

GCSE Education

5. Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the progress towards the implementation of the GCSE examination in comprehensive schools in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Preparation for the introduction of the GCSE is well on course in Wales. We have made significant resources available for the special programme of teacher training, and have offered local education authorities funds to supplement the secondary school capitation allowance during the first two years of the new examination courses.

NHS (Hospital Beds)

12. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the latest figure for the number of hospital beds available in National Health Service hospitals in Mid-Glamorgan and Wales, respectively.

Mr. Mark Robinson: In the year ending December 1984, the latest date for which there are figures the average number of daily available beds in Mid Glamorgan was 4,750. The corresponding figure for Wales was 22,310. The figures for 1985 will be available in a few weeks.

Welsh Water Authority

13. Mr. Livsey asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has received any representations regarding the privatisation of the Welsh water authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: I have received 15 letters following the publication of the Government's proposals for the privatisation of water authorities in England and Wales.

Education Grants

14. Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many grants for specifically educational purposes were made by his Department during the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Three hundred and thirty two such grants were made in the financial year 1985-86.

Waiting Lists

15. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Wales what new plans he has to deal with patient waiting lists in Mid-Glamorgan and other areas of Wales.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The management of waiting lists rests with health authorities. I have called in expert consultants and established a Welsh Office catalyst team to cooperate with health authorities in targeting the main problems and following through measures to reduce waiting times. A workshop to identify problem areas was held on 9 April and another to review progress will be held in the autumn. Authorities, including Mid Glamorgan, have taken steps to attack the lists giving most concern.

Employment Statistics

17. Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are unemployed in Wales, and in Clwyd, including school leavers; and what percentage increase there has been since May 1979.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The unadjusted March 1986 unemployment figures for Wales and Clwyd are 184,247 and 24,847 respectively. Unadjusted figures for 1979 were produced on a different basis and cannot properly be compared.

New Quay and Aberystwyth

19. Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to expand and develop the ports at New Quay and Aberystwyth; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Substantial support has already been given to harbour development at Aberystwyth, and I am prepared to consider any further proposals Ceredigion district council, as local harbour authority, may put to me for development either at Aberystwyth or at New Quay.

Health Services (Report)

Mr. Gwilym Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the connection between the return rate after surgery and waiting lists in Wales as disclosed in the report of Mr. John Yates of the health services management centre, Birmingham University.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The number of repeat appointments patients are given for out-patient clinics is one of the factors that will be examined in the coming months by Welsh health authorities and the Welsh Office team which has been established to concert action to reduce waiting lists and waiting times.

Health Care (Waiting Lists)

Mr. Gwilym Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the recent meeting with representatives of all health authorities in Wales regarding waiting lists.

Mr. Mark Robinson: On 9 April a workshop was held by the Department assisted by management consultants. It concluded that during the next six months health authorities should develop and implement action plans for the reduction of waiting lists and these should include the setting of measurable targets, the mechanism for involving the medical profession more closely, and improving information systems on waiting lists and the needs of patients on them. A Welsh Office team will assist authorities and monitor progress. A further workshop is being arranged for the autumn to review progress and any problems encountered.

NHS Managers (Objectives)

Mr. Gwilym Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what objectives are set for managers in the National Health Service in Wales; what monitoring is undertaken to ascertain if those objectives are attained; and what action is taken in the event of objectives not being attained.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The objectives of NHS general management in Wales are set out in the Department's circular WHC(84)15 which is available in the Library. It is for each individual health authority to determine specific objectives for unit and district general managers. The Department also monitors authorities' performance through a formal annual review process and by regular meetings with health authority chairmen and general managers. Action in cases where objectives are not attained would naturally vary in the circumstances of the case. General manager appointments have been made for a fixed term initially of three to five years, but with the option for either party to terminate the contract at the end of either the first or second year subject to six months' notice.

Cancer Treatment Facilities

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has yet received the two reports into the adequacy of cancer facilities in north Wales and throughout Wales referred to in his letter to the hon. Member for Ynys Môn of 5 November 1985; and when he expects to be able to make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The reports of the departmental working party on regional services to north Wales and of the Welsh Medical Committee Advisory Group on Cancer Services have now been received. These are presently being studied and a consultation paper is being prepared.

Schools (Equipment)

Sir Raymond Gower asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many complaints he has received concerning shortages of books and equipment in Welsh schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Over the last six months the Department has received 118 letters in which such complaints have been made. I regret that there should be grounds for such complaints in an area where expenditure levels reflect the education authorities' assessments of priorities.

Schools Inspectors

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make arrangements for the secondment to full-time teaching in schools of Her Majesty's Inspectors of Schools in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to do so.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the names of each of Her Majesty's Inspectors of Schools in Wales, together with the date of their appointment.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information requested is given in the following table:

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to increase the size of Her Majesty's Inspectors of Schools in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I have at present no plans to increase the complement.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will arrange for the two of Her Majesty's Inspectors of Schools in Wales who do not possess a specific degree or diploma in education to attend an appropriate course of training leading to an appropriate qualification;

(2) if he will make arrangements for those five of Her Majesty's Inspectors of Schools in Wales who have had no school teaching experience to gain that experience.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No. These inspectors were appointed on the basis of experience in other aspects of education which it is considered necessary to have within the inspectorate.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the number of Her Majesty's Inspectors of Schools in Wales who have been appointed with specific responsibility for subject areas, separately distinguishing those subject areas.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Schools are recruited on the basis of successful experience as teachers or lecturers. None is appointed solely on the basis of subject expertise and all have subject, territorial and phase responsibilities. In the specialism of its members Her Majesty's Inspectorate covers most of the subjects offered in schools and colleges.

Subject areas for which there is a first point of contact are identified in the Directory of HM Inspectors in England and Wales. I will place a copy of the directory in the Library.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will arrange for Her Majesty's Inspectors of Schools in Wales to be seconded on a full-time basis to industry.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to do so. I would refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 15 April 1986, at column 349.

Circular 11/83

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will withdraw paragraph 7 of Welsh Office circular 11/83.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I have no plans to do so.

Kidney Stones (Treatment)

Mr. Williams asked the Secretary of State for Wales what facilities exist or are planned within Welsh National Health Service hospitals for laser treatment of kidney stones; how many kidney stone patients are treated by laser or surgery in Welsh hospitals in a year; how many such patients are currently on the waiting list; what is the average waiting time; and what are the corresponding figures for treatment, waiting lists and waiting time for each hospital or health authority area in Wales.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information is not readily available and I will write to the right hon. Gentleman as soon as I am in a position to do so.

Singleton and Velinare Hospitals

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales when his Department will have the figures for 1985 pertaining to the median waiting time and the maximum waiting time before admission to Singleton and Velinare hospitals for a cervical carcinoma.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information requested will be available later this year, when all the relevant returns for 1985 have been received and when the information contained in these returns has been validated.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Navan Fort (Quarrying)

Mr. Mallon asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy not to permit the continuance of quarrying at the Navan Fort site.

Mr. Needham: Navan Fort is an ancient monument in the ownership of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland and there are no proposals to quarry within the precincts of the fort.

Mr. Mallon asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when a decision will be announced about future quarrying on the Navan Fort site.

Mr. Needham: The report of the public inquiry into the planning application to continue quarrying on land adjacent to Navan fort has been received and a decision will be made when the report has been considered.

Mr. Mallon asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement outlining what representations he has received on the future of the Navan Fort site.

Mr. Needham: A planning application was lodged with the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland in November 1984 for permission to continue quarrying on land adjacent to Navan Fort in Co Armagh and to erect plant and buildings. Over 300 representations and objections to the proposal were received and these were examined by the Planning Appeals Commission at a public inquiry. The commission's report has now been received and is being considered.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Falkland Islands

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to respond to the request by the Falklands legislature for the declaration of a 200-mile fishing zone.

Mr. Eggar: During her visit to the Falkland Islands from 23 to 28 February my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State explained to councillors and others our view that the most effective way of controlling the south-west Atlantic fishery and conserving fish stocks is to work for a multilaterally-based conservation and management regime under FAO auspices.

Guatemala

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with Guatemala following the election of President Cerezo.

Mr. Eggar: We hope the election of President Cerezo and the return to democratic government in Guatemala will facilitate a resumption of official relations, for which we have always been ready.

NORAID

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has, for each of the last 10 years, as to the amount of financial support received by the Irish Republican Army and Sinn Fein from NORAID in the United States; and what steps he proposes to take to staunch this flow of funds.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: NORAID members claim that they have raised more than $3 million in the last 15 years. It is illegal in the United Kingdom to give money to the Provisional IRA. United States law is a matter for the United States authorities.

The United States Government's total opposition to organisations involved directly or indirectly in terrorism in Northern ireland is beyond doubt. It takes active steps to arrest and prosecute those engaged in the export of arms to the terrorists.

Crime (United States of America)

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the latest figures relating to the number of murders and crimes of violence per head of population in the United States of America, for each of the last five years; and if he has available to him the relevant figures for each individual state.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is not readily available, but I will write to my hon. Friend and arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House as soon as possible.

Libya

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, when he met his European Economic Community colleagues on 14 April, he was aware that President Reagan had sought the agreement of the Prime Minsiter for the use of United States bases in the United Kingdom to launch an attack on targets in Libya; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Yes. I was present in No. 10 when the initial message from President Reagan was received. I played a full part in the consultations which followed. These included a visit to London, and a number of other European capitals, by General Walters. In consequence, at the meeting of European Community Foreign Ministers on 14 April, I was aware, as were indeed others with whom the United States had been in touch, that United States military action against Libya was an early possibility. I was, of course, also aware both of President Reagan's request for an agreement on the use of United States aircraft from bases in the United Kingdom and of the response which had been given to that request. Like others, however, I had no confirmation that the President had taken the final decision to go ahead, and specifically on the night of 14-15 April, until I returned to London after the meeting.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received about trade sanctions taken against the United Kingdom by Arab countries following the United States air raid on Libya.

Mr. Renton: I am not aware of any such trade sanctions.

Libyan Nationals

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the action taken by the Libyan Government in respect of the Libyans permitted to leave the United Kingdom following the killing of WPC Fletcher in April 1984, particularly Dr. Omar Sodani, Ali Abuzich, Matouk Matouk and Abdul Ghadir Baghdadi.

Mr. Renton: We cannot confirm that any action has been taken by the Libyan authorities.

SALT 2

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on his recent meeting with Paul Nitze, the United States negotiator on the strategic arms reduction talks, regarding the SALT 2 treaty; and what advice Her Majesty's Government are giving the United States Government on staying within the SALT 2 agreement.

Mr. Renton: The Prime Minister and my right hon. and learned Friend had separate meetings on 23 April with Ambassador Nitze. Their discussions covered a wide range of arms control issues, Soviet non-compliance with current agreements, and the need for all parties to adhere to the SALT 2 agreement and ABM treaty. They confirmed that the Government's attitude last July, when the Prime Minister welcomed the President's decision to continue to abide by the SALT 2 constraints, remained unchanged.

Additional Geneva Convention Protocols

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent consultations he has had with other North Atlantic Treaty Organisation countries on the ratification of the additional Geneva convention protocols.

Mr. Renton: The question of ratification of the additional protocols to the Geneva conventions was most recently discussed with NATO partners at a meeting on 18 April.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Government hope to introduce legislation for the ratification of the additional Geneva convention protocols which they signed on 12 December 1977.

Mr. Eggar: Consultations with our North Atlantic Treaty Organisation partners are continuing, and I am not yet able to state when we would be in a position to proceed with the additional protocols.

Nicaragua-Honduras Border

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government's support has been sought for the Nicaraguan proposal to Honduras for the setting up of a border commission to monitor border violations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: No.

SCOTLAND

Norrich More

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy not to approve any proposal for the use of part of the site of special scientific interest at Norrich More as the location for assembling pipes for the North Sea oil industry; what advice he has received on this matter from the Nature Conservancy Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The Nature Conservancy Council has strongly recommended that the Secretary of State should call in the relevant application for planning permission in the light of the planning authority's intention to grant permission against the council's advice. My right hon. and learned Friend is at present considering whether to exercise his call-in power.

Homeless Persons

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial assistance his Department gives to charitable organisations providing accommodation for homeless persons.

Mr. Ancram: Assistance is available from the Scottish Development Department to voluntary organisations concerned with homelessness under section 13 of the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977. This is available for innovative projects with a Scottish application, however; local projects providing accommodation would not normally be eligible. In the current year, grant aid is being given under section 13 towards the administrative costs of the Scottish Council for Single Homeless and Scottish Women's Aid and towards Shelter (Scotland's) Young Persons' Housing Project.

Assistance is also given under the urban programme to a number of projects for the homeless sponsored by the voluntary sector, including some which provide accommodation. The amount of this assistance cannot readily be quantified.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of local authority financial support for charitable organisations providing accommodation for homeless persons.

Mr. Ancram: This information is not collected centrally. I must refer the hon. Member to the local authorities in which he is interested.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial assistance his Department gives to housing authorities for the continuation of emergency accommodation for homeless persons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The Government have increased the planned level of capital investment in public sector housing this year to £322 million, an increase of £46 million, or over 16 per cent. above the figure at the beginning of the last financial year. Within the block capital allocations to local authorities the Government do not hypothecate sums for particular purposes and it is for individual authorities to decide on their own priorities within the resources available according to local circumstances and needs. Financial assistance towards current expenditure on hostels and lodging houses is available through housing support grant; in 1986-87 this amounts to £952,711.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the cost in providing bed and breakfast accommodation for homeless persons in Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is not available for Scotland.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice his Department has given to the new town development corporations to assist district councils in making provision for homeless persons.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The code of guidance on the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977 was issued by my Department to new town development corporations in September 1980. Chapter 7 of the code contains guidance on management policies to facilitate co-operation between development corporations and housing authorities under section 9 of the Act.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many homeless persons there were in Scotland for each year since 1979.

Mr. Ancram: The following table shows the number of applications under the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977 made to local authorities in the year ending 31 March:

Year ending 31 March	Number of applications
1979	16,123
1980	15,466
1981	14,861
1982	15,950
1983	16,521
1984	15,245
1985	17,856

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice his Department has given to regional councils providing social work support for homeless persons in the 16 to 18 year age group.

Mr. John MacKay: A code of guidance on the discharge of their functions under the Homeless Persons Act 1977 was issued to both district and regional and islands authorities in September 1980. The points addressed specifically to regional and islands councils concerned matters of practice and provision by social work departments and the need for co-operation with the district council housing departments, both through formal administrative structures and at the level of casework. The code makes no mention of persons in any particular age group, but I have no reason to think that it requires any expansion for this purpose.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he has given to local authorities on the provision of emergency accommodation for homeless persons in the 16 to 18 year age group.

Mr. Ancram: It is primarily for local authorities to assess what provision is appropriate in their areas, in the light of local circumstances and the level of resources available. However, part 7 of the Scottish Housing Handbook, "Housing for Single People, Shared Accommodation and Hostels" (HMSO, 1984), gives guidance to local authorities on the provsion of accommodation suitable for single people including, in chapter 3, detail design guidance for hostels.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many homeless persons currently live in bed and breakfast accommodation in Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: It is estimated that there were some 500 persons temporarily housed in bed and breakfast or emergency accommodation at 31 December 1985 who applied under the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977.

Homelessness

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when last a study of homelessness was undertaken by his Department; what were the findings; and what action he has taken to remedy the problem.

Mr. Ancram: The Scottish Development Department has not carried out such a study, although we do monitor the number of applications under the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977 and detailed statistics are published at intervals. The need for further information, including research, is being kept under review.

Homelessness is a serious, but localised, problem. It is for individual housing authorities to decide on their own priorities within the resources available to them.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice his Department has given to regional, island and district councils to achieve a co-ordinated response to homelessness; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Chapter 7 of the code of guidance on the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977, issued by the Scottish Development Department to local authorities in September 1980, contains detailed guidance on co-operation between housing authorities and regional council social work departments. The code recommends that to facilitate co-operation formal administrative structures for liaison should be set up as proposed in the 1975 report by the Morris Committee, "Housing and Social Work — a Joint Approach". I believe that the arrangements to implement this recommendation are best decided locally; I have no indication that they are not working satisfactorily.

Public Sector Housing

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many houses were built by public housing authorities in Scotland in each year since 1974.

Mr. Michael Ancram: The information requested for the years 1974 to 1983 appears on page 11 of Scottish Housing Statistics 1983, a copy of which is available in the Library. Figures for 1984 and 1985 are set out in the table:

Public sector house completions

	1984	*1985
Local authority	2,120	1,983
New Towns	233	201
SSHA	280	622
Housing associations	2,076	1,075
Government Departments	14	17
Total public sector	4,723	3,898

* Provisional.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many houses were built in each of the Scottish new towns in each year since 1974.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information is as follows:

	Cumbernauld	East Kilbride	Glenrothes	Irvine	Livingston
1974	866	712	122	386	890
1975	738	886	588	1,086	933

District and Island Councils (Emergency Accommodation)

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to the emergency accommodation provision made by district and island councils in Scotland; and what information he has as to any variations in the level or type of such provision as between different councils.

Mr. Ancram: No information is held centrally about the provision of emergency accommodation made by district and island councils in Scotland.

Blood Products

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of the factor VIII used in Scotland comes from blood donated in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: During 1985 99·7 per cent. of all factor VIII used in Scotland came from blood donated in Scotland.

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland which health boards, in 1985, used factor VIII imported from outwith Scotland; and, in each case, how much was used.

Mr. Rifkind: During 1985 one health board in the west of Scotland used factor VIII imported from outwith Scotland. Precise figures are not yet available but it is estimated that 20,000 to 25,000 international units were used. This represents half the needs of one patient for the year.

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much factor VIII is used each year in Scotland; and what this amounts to as a proportion of the total amount used in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Rifkind: In 1984, the latest year for which precise figures are available, 7·239 million international units were used, representing 9·4 per cent. of total usage in Great Britain.

Hepatitis B Immunoglobulin

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much post-exposure Hepatitis B immunoglobulin has been used in Scotland in each of the past three years; and what has been the cost of its use in each year.

Mr. Rifkind: It is not possible separately to identify the costs of production of this product. The Protein Fractination Centre of the Scottish National Blood Transfusion Service has issued to its regional centres supplies of Hepatitis B immunoglobulin against the requirement of individual clinicians as follows:

	Vials (single unit dose)
1983	496
1984	628
1985	737

Scottish Development Agency

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give figures showing the annual amounts spent by the Scottish Development Agency on consultants' fees since 1980.

Mr. Allan Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 10 March 1986, c. 372]: The amounts spent by the Scottish Development Agency on consultants' fees for the years in question were:

1980-81	1,846,215
1981-82	3,115,748
1982-83	4,265,553
1983-84	5,086,337
1984-85	4,953,324
1985-86	8,568,179

These amounts, which exclude fees associated with capital contracts, were incurred for a variety of purposes including strategic studies, project area studies, programme development, monitoring and economic services, investment advice, taxation, legal, valuation and property advice.

Hip Operations

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many orthopaedic surgeons are employed in each of the health boards in Scotland who carry out hip replacement operations; and how many operations are carried out on average by each surgeon.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 21 April 1986, c. 22]: The information requested is shown in the following table for the latest year for which figures are available. The number of hip replacements includes both total and partial replacements. Total replacements form nearly twice the number of partial and other forms of hip replacements.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Foreign Newspapers (Library)

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Lord Privy Seal what criteria govern the selection of foreign newspapers which are available in the Library; if he will arrange for copies of the Baltimore News, backdated to 12 April, to be made available in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: The selection of foreign newspapers available in the Library is strictly limited by constraints of space, cost and staff time, and only a very few foreign titles are regularly filed. If the hon. Member has a need to consult specific issues of this newspaper, the Baltimore News American, the Librarian will gladly do his best to help.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Young Offenders (Yorkshire and Humberside)

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many young prisoners aged 15 to 20 years have been held in adult prisons in each of the last 60 months, month by month, from the Yorkshire and Humberside area.

Mr. Mellor: The home address of persons in Prison Department establishments in England and Wales is not recorded centrally. The readily available information relates to the numbers of young prisoners held in adult establishments in the Yorkshire and Humberside region and is given in the following table.

Population of young prisoners in adult establishments† in the Yorkshire and Humberside region at month end April 1981 to March 1986*

* Including remand prisoners and fine defaulters.

† Askham Grange, Hull (excluding the remand centre) and Leeds. No young prisoners were held in Lindholme, Rudgate and Wakefield, or in Northallerton before March 1982 when it became a young offender establishment.

Data Protection Act 1984

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department was consulted by the data protection registrar about the contents of the agency's current advertisements.

Mr. Waddington: No.

Merseyside Police (Absenteeism)

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will request the chief constable of Merseyside to investigate the incidence of absenteeism within his force; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No. It is for the chief constable to keep under review the numbers of officers who are absent from duty and the reasons for their absence.

Prison Kitchens

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the expenditure in the last financial year on improving the basic structure of, improving the facilities in, and on decorating prison kitchens.

Mr. Mellor: In the financial year 1985-86 £1,972,000 was spent on major schemes to improve the structure of and facilities in kitchens in existing prison establishments. This figure represents only expenditure actually incurred during the year; it does not represent the total value of improvement projects, some of which extend over several years. In addition £254,000 was spend on major repairs and maintenance and £241,000 was spent on additional and replacement equipment for existing kitchens.

These figures do not include expenditure on kitchens in establishments still under construction or taken into use in 1985-86, neither do they cover minor schemes or day-to-day work on repairs and maintenance which is often carried out using inmate labour. Expenditure on such minor works could be identified only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of prison kitchens; what is the procedure for their inspection; and how many outbreaks of food poisoning there have been in each of the last five years.

Mr. Mellor: There are 124 prison kitchens, and all are inspected regularly and routinely by regional catering managers and safety officers. There have been no serious outbreaks of food poisoning in the last five years.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will invite environmental health officers to inspect prison kitchens.

Mr. Mellor: No. However, the prison department has its own arrangements for the inspection of prison kitchens and these can include calling upon environmental health officers for advice.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will remove Crown immunity from food hygiene legislation for prison kitchens.

Mr. Mellor: No.

Fire Equipment (London)

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will direct the return to L23 Hainault fire station of the pump appliance temporarily withdrawn on 31 March 1979 under the interim plan for the London fire brigade, and the return to L30 Plaistow fire station of the 100-foot turntable ladder appliance which was similarly withdrawn; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The deployment of appliances to maintain the appropriate standards of fire cover is a matter for the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority to consider in the first instance. My right hon. Friend has approved and remains satisfied with the arrangements for 1986-87.

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to use his powers under section 19 of the Fire Services Act 1947 to consent to a loss of any firefighters or fire appliances from any fire station in the L division or proposed north-east area command of the London fire brigade, or specifically the loss of a pump appliance or hydraulic platform applicance from L25 Dagenham fire station, during the financial years 1986-87 or 1987-88.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. Friend approved the establishment scheme submitted by the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority. The only changes provided for in the north-east area were the reduction of a hose laying lorry at F21 Stratford and the transfer of a turntable ladder from C24 Whitechapel to C25 Dowgate.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Stapleton (Documents)

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Lincolnshire as to when documents seized by the police from the home of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Stapleton of Boothby Graffoe, Lincoln, on 3 October 1985 were returned to that address; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Some of the documents seized on 3 October 1985 were returned to Mrs. Stapleton through her solicitor on 13 December 1985, 19 and 21 March 1986. The remainder are still being held by the Fraud Squad as documentary evidence for the current investigation on which criminal proceedings are in progress.

Fire Service (London)

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he proposes to take to ensure that the proposals contained in the London fire and civil defence authority scheme for the reorganisation of the London fire brigade maintain a single unified fire service for London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We are satisfied that the authority's proposals will maintain a single unified fire service for London.

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the application of his Department's criteria relating to overprovision to the existing level of fire cover by the London fire brigade; whether any reductions in the present level are contemplated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: In considering the establishment scheme of the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority for 1986-87 we were concerned to ensure that it would provide adequate protection from fire in line with nationally agreed and recommended standards, and consistent with the need for economy, efficiency and effectiveness. My right hon. Friend approved 6,849 whole-time uniformed posts at 1 April 1986 and a number of supernumerary posts which the authority proposes should be reduced by natural wastage from the brigade strength.

News International Plant, Wapping

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what has been the average number of police per day stationed outside the News International works, Wapping, since the industrial dispute began;

(2) what is the total amount of police time spent at the News International works, Wapping, since the industrial dispute started.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the ranks of all the police involved in duties outside the premises of News International, Wapping, on an average day; and what are their respective duties.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information is as follows:

Rank	Duties
Superintendent	Officer in charge
Chief Inspector	Deputy officer in charge
Inspector	Supervision of gate area/picket/crowd control. Mounted reserve
Sergeant	Supervision of gate area/picket/crowd control. Mounted Reserve
Police Constable	Gate area/picket/crowd control. Mounted Reserve.

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what contacts are made by the police with the News International management arising from the current dispute; who is the most senior police official involved in such contacts; and when such high-level discussions last occurred during the dispute.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The police maintain regular contact with all parties involved in the dispute. The most senior officer involved is a deputy assistant commissioner. He last met the senior management of News International on 10 March, Ms. Brenda Dean of SOGAT '82 on 17 March 1986 and Mr. Ron Todd of the TGWU on 20 March.

Traffic Lights

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions there have been of drivers failing to comply with road traffic lights in the last period for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The available information relates to proceedings at magistrates' courts for offences of failing to comply with traffic signals (excluding those at pedestrian light-controlled crossings) and is published annually in "Offences Relating to Motor Vehicles, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables" (table 5 of the issue for 1984). In 1984, there were about 35,500 such proceedings.

Kidnap Insurance

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions were held with the Irish Minister of Justice in The Hague on 24 April on the subject of kidnap insurance and payments to paramilitary groups; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: In the course of a meeting of EC Ministers of the Interior and of Justice which I attended in The Hague on 24 April it was agreed that the possibility of measures against kidnap ransom payments and extortion demands should be studied urgently by officials.

Prison Service (Ethnic Origin Survey)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the results of the prison department exercise following the issue of circular instruction 25/84 to all prison establishments which called for the collection and recording of ethnic origin of all prisoners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Information on the ethnic origins of prisoners will be published soon.

Prison Population

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the prison population and certified normal accommodation for all prison department establishments in England and Wales on 19 April;

(2) what was the actual prison population and the certified normal accommodation of (a) Leeds prison, (b) Durham prison, (c) Manchester prison, (d) Cardiff prison, (e) Lewes prison, (f) Oxford prison, (g) Leicester prison, (h) Reading prison, and (i) Liverpool prison on 19 April.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is not available centrally in respect of 19 April.

On 18 April the certified normal accommodation and population of the establishments listed were as follows:

Establishment	Certified Normal Accommodation	Population
Leeds	630	1,150
Durham*	708	868
Manchester†	927	1,439
Cardiff†	339	487
Lewes	361	547
Oxford	130	234
Leicester	203	396
Reading	178	318
Liverpool	838	1,131
Total England and Wales:	41,198	46,823

* Includes female wing.
† Includes remand centre.

Prisoners

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the estimated population of untried prisoners in prison department establishments in England and Wales on 19 April, or the latest date for which figures are available, by length of time since initial reception into custody;

(2) if he will state, for the latest year for which figures are available (a) the total number of persons gaoled for all offences in England and Wales and (b) the total number of persons gaoled in England and Wales for schedule I offences within the meaning of the Criminal Justice Act 1982.

Mr. Mellor: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, for the latest year for which figures are available, what was the percentage of prisoners discharged from prison establishments in England and Wales who (a) qualified for the homeless discharge grant and (b) were of no fixed abode.

Mr. Mellor: This information is not available centrally and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Probation Orders

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, for the latest year for which figures are available, what is the percentage of persons aged (a) over 21 and (b) under 21 years who successfully completed probation orders without breach or conviction for a further offence.

Mr. Mellor: The latest readily available information is given in the following table, which summarises table 2.11 of "Probation Statistics, England and Wales, 1983".

Terminations of probation orders in the first six months of 1983 by reason for termination and age at commencement of order
England and Wales Percentage of terminations

Reason for termination	Age at commencement of order
	Under 21	21 or over	All ages
Order ran its full course	65	71	69
Replaced by a conditional discharge order	3	3	3
Terminated early: for good progress	12	11	11

Reason for termination	Age at commencement of order
	Under 21	21 or over	All ages
for failure to comply with requirements	3	2	2
for conviction of an offence	16	10	12
for other reasons	2	2	2
Total orders (=100 per cent.)	7,730	11,740	19,470

Community Service Orders

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state, for the latest year for which figures are available, the percentage of persons aged (a) over 21 years, and (b) under 21 years who successfully completed community service orders without breach or conviction for a further offence.

Mr. Mellor: The latest readily available information is published in table 6.11 of "Probation Statistics, England and Wales, 1983". In the first six months of 1983, the specified hours were completed by 74 per cent. of those who were aged under 21 when their community service order began, and by 78 per cent. of those who were aged 21 or over.

Parole

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, for the latest year for which figures are available, what was the percentage of persons successfully completing a period of parole licence without further conviction.

Mr. Mellor: This information is not available.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of those prisoners, granted parole in 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985, were recalled to prison.

Mr. Mellor: This information is not available in the form requested. Information about the numbers of prisoners recommended for parole and recalled to prison during the years in question is as follows:

	Recommended	Recalled	Percentage
1985*	14,168	803	5·7
1984	11,909	512	4·3
1983	5,363	512	9·5
1982	5,200	593	11·4

* Provisional figures

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners serving sentences of (a) 18 months, (b) more than 18 months and less than two years, (c) two years or more and less than three years, (d) three years or more but less than four years and (e) four years or more but less than five years were granted parole in 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is as follows:

	1 year 1 year 11 months	2 years 2 years 11 months	3 years 3 years 11 months	4 years 4 years 11 months
1982	201	1,877	1,603	654
1983	202	1,891	1,658	756
1984	5,743	3,247	1,616	648
1985 (Provisional)	8,302	3,070	1,457	605

Separate figures for sentences of 18 months are not available.

The increases between 1983 and 1984 in the first two columns illustrate the effect of the reduction in the minimum qualifying period for parole under Section 33 of the Criminal Justice Act 1982.

Petty Offenders

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking or plans to take to divert petty offenders, including the mentally ill and alcoholics, from custody.

Mr. Mellor: The courts have a wide range of alternatives to custody at their disposal. For mentally disordered offenders who need hospital treatment, the number of places available in regional secure units within the hospital system continues to increase. The courts have recently received up-to-date guidance on their sentencing powers in the new edition of "The Sentence of the Court".

Prison Service (Expenditure)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what increase in real terms in expenditure on the prison service is expected between the financial years 1986-87 and 1988-89 in England and Wales.

Mr. Mellor: The Government's public expenditure plans are formulated in cash terms. As indicated in Cmnd. 9702, expenditure on the prison service in England and Wales is planned to increase from £700 million in 1986-87 to £770 million in 1988-89 (table 3.11). This represents an increase of £20 million (or 2·9 per cent.) in real terms, using the GDP deflator.

Probation Service (Expenditure)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what increase in real terms in expenditure on the probation service is expected between the financial years 1986-87 and 1988-89 in England and Wales.

Mr. Mellor: As indicated in the White Paper on public expenditure (Cmnd. 9702) no decision has yet been taken on the provision for local authorities' relevant current expenditure, including that on the Probation Service, in 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Sexual Offences Act 1985

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of prosecutions and convictions recorded under the Sexual Offences Act 1985 during the first six months of the Act's operation.

Mr. Mellor: Such information is not yet available.

Data Protection Registrar

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions Ministers in his Department have held an official meeting with the Data Protection Registrar either before or after the register was opened.

Mr. Waddington: Two.

Prison Officers' Houses, Culcheth

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 21 April, Official Report, column 18, at what price the 49 empty prison officers houses at Culcheth are being offered for sale.

Mr. Mellor: Offers have been invited for the sale of 38 empty prison officers' houses at Culcheth on the basis that the purchasers carry out works to secure the adoption of roads, footpaths, street lighting and the sewage pumping station. Three offers have been received and are being considered.

Libyan Students

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the text of the letter which was given to the 21 Libyan students who were arrested and detained on 22 April prior to deportation.

Mr. Waddington: Following is the text of the notice of intention to deport:

The Secretary of State has reason to believe that you have been actively involved in Libyan student revolutionary activities in the United Kingdom and has accordingly decided that your departure from the United Kingdom would be conducive to the public good for reasons of national security. He has therefore decided to make a deportation order against you by virtue of Section 3(5)(b) of the Immigration Act 1971 requiring you to leave the United Kingdom and prohibiting you from returning while the order remains in force.

By virtue of Section 15(3) of the Act, you are not entitled to appeal against the decision to make the deportation order but, if you wish, you may make representations to an independent advisory panel. You will be allowed to appear before the panel if you wish to do so but may not be represented. To such an extent as the advisers may sanction, you may be assisted by a friend and arrange for third parties to testify on your behalf. You should inform the officer who hands you this letter whether or not you wish to make representations to the panel of advisers.

If the Secretary of State makes the deportation order, you will, by virtue of Section 17(1) of the Act, have a right of appeal against removal to the country specified in the removal directions on the grounds that you ought to be removed to a different country specified by you.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the full text of the statement offered for signature to the 21 Libyan students served with notices of intention to deport on 22 April, acknowledging receipt of the notice and indicating that they did not intend to make representations to the panel of advisers.

Mr. Waddington: Following is the text of the statement:

I.....

having been served with notice of intention to deport me from the United Kingdom, understand that there is no statutory right of appeal against that decision.

I do not wish to take advantage of an extra-statutory hearing before the Home Secretary's advisers.

Signed.....
Witnessed.....
Time..... Date..... Place.....

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the 21 Libyan students, served with notices of intention to deport, waived their right to make representations to the panel of advisers; and how many of them had access to legal advice before they did so.

Mr. Waddington: All of them. From the information available to me I understand that at least one consulted his solicitor and six their consular representative before waiving their right to make representations.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what facilities have been arranged for access by lawyers to the 21 Libyan students served with notices of intention to deport.

Mr. Giles Shaw: From the information that is readily available. I understand that three detained persons were informed of their right to consult a solicitor but none took it up.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long after their arrest the families of the detained Libyan students were notified of their whereabouts; and whether they have had any opportunity to communicate with their families.

Mr. Giles Shaw: All of the detained persons were advised on reaching Paddington Green police station of their right to make a telephone call, and 11 persons did so. Information on whether they were informed of this right before then is not readily available.

Mr. Madden asked the secretary of State for the Home Department who is serving on the panels of advisers considering the cases of Libyans who were arrested on 22 April and who wish to make representations against deportation.

Mr. Waddington: The following have been appointed to conduct the non-statutory advisory procedure for which provision is made in paragraph 150 of the immigration rules:

The right hon. Lord Justice Lloyd.
Sir Patrick Nairne GCB, MC.
Mr. D. L. Neve.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will name the 21 Libyan students recently arrested; if, in each case, he will state when the student first entered the United Kingdom; on how many occasions each has re-entered the United Kingdom; where each was studying; and if he will give details of any spouses and dependants each student may have in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waddington: Following is a list of the 22 Libyans deported on 25 April 1986 together with information available from immigration records about their places of study or employment in the United Kingdom and dependants accompanying them. I shall write to the hon. Member with information about the dates of their first entry to the United Kingdom and the occasions they have re-entered the country when it has been collated.

Mr. Ali Mansoor Fitori

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of West Yorkshire as to the time of, and reasons for, the arrest of Mr. Ali Mansoor Fitori in Bradford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: Mr. Ali Mansoor Fitori was arrested in Bradford at 7.15 pm on 23 April 1986 and served with a notice of intention to deport and a detention order. The grounds on which the decision to deport was taken were the same as for the 21 Libyans arrested the previous day.

TRANSPORT

British Transport Police

Dr. Hampson asked the Secretary of State for Transport when the operations of the British transport police were last reviewed; what conclusions were drawn from any such review; and if he will make a statement on the work of the Force.

Mr. Ridley: The operations of the British Transport police are kept under constant review by the British Transport Police Committee, which can seek advice from Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary as appropriate. I strongly hold the view that the work done by the force, much of it under difficult conditions is of a very high standard and deserves to be wholeheartedly supported.

Vehicle Registration Prefix

Mr. Allen Adams asked the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made if the implications for the level of vehicle stockpiles in Scotland of the proposed change from August to October in the date for prefix licensing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: None. The reason for moving the month of the year identifier prefix change to October, from 1987, was the strongly pressed view of a major part of the motor industry that this would overall be the most beneficial alternative to the present August month of change, which is generally regarded as an unsatisfactory month for a substantial peak of new car sales.

Dr. Glyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from the Motor Agents Association about his proprosed change in the vehicle registration system from August to October; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: I have received representations from the Motor Agents Association for a July rather than an October change. I told the association on 24 April that I would be prepared to consider an alternative if the weight of opinion in the motor industry as a whole changes, and provided that this is acceptable to the police. Otherwise the change will go ahead as planned in October 1987.

Drink-driving (Campaign)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what indications he has received that the police will be devoting extra resources into drink-driving enforcement during his forthcoming campaign in May and June;

(2) what steps he has taken to publicise the forthcoming drink-driving campaign; and what notification he has given to the police.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Ministers' intention to focus attention to the problems of drinking and driving during the spring and early summer phase of the annual road safety publicity campaign was announced publicly in a parliamentary answer on 14 November 1985 to the hon. Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Bruinvels) at column 267, and again at the press launch of the Government's 1985 drinking and driving campaign where it was welcomed by a senior police representative.

Ministers had further discussions with senior police representatives in February this year on the new campaign and associated matters including the police's continuing allocation of resources to enforcement of drinking and driving laws as part of their attention to a year-round road safety problem. The Department has continued to discuss the campaign with police representatives and others with a statutory role in road safety publicity and education.

Judicial Reviews

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for Transport is he will give the number of judicial reviews in which his Department has been involved since 1 March 1974; and on how many occasions the court of final recourse has found against him.

Mr. Ridley: Since December 1983 there have been 11 applications for judicial review of decisions by my Department. One of these has yet to be heard. Of the remainder, the court of final recourse has found against in seven cases, one of which is still under appeal, and in favour in three cases.

Statistics are not readily available for the period from 1 March 1974 to 31 December 1983 and the information could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Woolwich Ferry

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what reductions in pay and conditions for staff employed on the Woolwich ferry have been introduced since he assumed ownership; and what compensation will be made available to make good personal losses;

(2) what guidelines he has issued to the London borough of Greenwich for the operation of the Woolwich ferry in respect of staffing levels, pay rates, working conditions and the level of service to be provided;

(3) how many staff are now employed on the operation of the Woolwich ferry; and how this compares with the size of the work force before he assumed ownership of the ferry;

(4) what reductions in the level of service provided by the Woolwich ferry have been made since he assumed ownership; and whether these are intended to be permanent.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Greenwich borough council has entered into an agency agreement with us to operate the Woolwich ferry. This means that it is responsible for its day-to-day operation including staffing and pay.

I understand that it recruited staff on the basis that terms and conditions should be compatible with those in force locally. It is seeking to resolve some issues this has raised. Ferry staff, like other GLC staff continuing in local government service, may be eligible for detriment payments from the London Residuary Body. Claims they make for such compensation will be impartially examined.

Service and staffing levels remain broadly as before 1 April. An early review of the ferry operation would help this free service run in a way that is fair to the taxpayer as well as to those who use it.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport how much money he is making available to the London borough of Greenwich for the operation of the Woolwich ferry during the current year; and how this compares with actual spending on the ferry in 1984-85 and 1985-86.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The budget agreed with Greenwich for 1986-87 is £2,408,530. The GLC's budgeted figures for 1985-86 and 1984-85 were £2,381,000 and £2,014,000 respectively.

BR (Track Mileage)

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his practice to collect figures on the number of miles of double track railway single tracked by British Rail.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. This is not a matter for the Government.

LRT (Bus Services)

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the mileage that London Regional Transport local stage carriage bus services run at present; and how this compares with equivalent figures five and 10 years ago.

Mr. David Mitchell: The vehicle mileage operated by London Regional Transport — formerly the London Transport Executive—on stage carriage bus services was as follows:

	Million miles
*1985	163
1980	173
1975	178

* The 1985 figure is provisional, and excludes services operated for London Regional Transport by operators other than London Buses Ltd. (less than 1 million vehicle miles).

Road Accidents

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he makes of the percentage of road traffic accidents where a contributory factor is, or is claimed to be, the jumping of traffic lights by one of the parties involved.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I regret this information is not available.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Cereals (Production Costs)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the cost of production by an efficient cereal farmer per tonne of wheat, barley and rapeseed on optimum holding.

Mr. Gummer: Production conditions, husbandry practices, and therefore production costs vary throughout the country. This Department does not therefore produce figures for an optimum holding.

Foodstuffs (Prices and Levies)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will bring up to date the information concerning prices and levies charged on foodstuffs on the same basis as given in his reply of 26 February 1985, Official Report, columns 89-91; and to what extent prices to United Kingdom farmers have risen in terms of pound sterling as a result of the fall in the exchange rate since July 1985.

Mrs. Fenner: The information requested on levies and "world" prices was set out in the reply of 21 April at column 42. Average market-wholesale prices in the United Kingdom are shown in the table. Support prices fixed under the common agricultural policy are converted into pound sterling at the representative rate of exchange: this rate has remained unchanged since 1979. The effects of changes in the market rate for the pound are generally offset, for most of the major agricultural products, by the operation of monetary compensatory amounts, import levies and export refunds.

Selected average market/wholesale prices in the United Kingdom for the week ending 5 April 1986

	Market/wholesale prices for week ending 5 April 1986 £/tonne
Common wheat (grower to merchant price in England and Wales)	114
Barley (grower to merchant price England and Wales)	107
Maize (USA export, Bristol)	157
Rice (USA long grain, London)	605
Sugar (refined, bulk, granulated)	428
Olive oil (EC origin, CIF United Kingdom)	Not quoted
Butter (English, wholesale, London)	2,231
Skimmed milk powder (list price)	1,100
Fat cattle (certified United Kingdom, liveweight)	961
Fat sheep (certified, Great Britain, estimated dressed carcase weight)	2,573
Fat pigs (all pigs, deadweight)	967
Poultrymeat (broilers, liveweight)	571
Eggs (size 3, packer to producer price)	483

Note:

A wide range of price quotations exists for individual commodities depending on quality, presentation, stage of marketing and so on. These shown are intended to be illustrative of prices paid by wholesalers or received by producers.

Meat Imports

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what standards exist and what physical controls are applied to ascertain whether any meats imported into the United Kingdom have been classified as unfit for human consumption in their country of origin; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: It is an offence under the Imported Food Regulations 1984 to import into England and Wales any food intended for human consumption which is unfit for human consumption or is unsound or unwholesome. In addition, the regulations implement Council directive 72/462/EEC (as amended) on health and veterinary inspection problems relating to the importation of fresh meat from third countries, Council directive 64/433/EEC (as amended) on health problems affecting intra-Community trade in fresh meat and Council directive 71/118/EEC (as amended) on health problems affecting trade in fresh poultrymeat. These directives require, inter alia, that fresh meat from domestic bovine animals including buffalo, swine, sheep and goats, solipeds and poultry exported for sale for human consumption must bear a health mark to indicate that it has been produced in an establishment which has been approved as meeting their hygiene and structural requirements. It is also a requirement that the consignment must be accompanied by a health certificate signed by the supervising official veterinarian stating that the meat was produced in accordance with the conditions specified in the relevant Directive and it is therefore considered to be fit for human consumption. Meat from species other than those covered by the directives is subject to national rules and my Department also requires such meat to be produced under corresponding conditions and to be health marked.

These regulations are enforced by the port health authorities who examine certificates and may exercise their discretionary powers to carry out a detailed inspection of the meat. Where, following an inspection, a port health authority considers that the meat contravenes the requirements of the regulations, that meat will either be destroyed, re-exported or disposed of in such a manner as to prevent its use for human consumption.

Parallel requirements apply under corresponding legislation in Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Badger Control (Report)

Mr. Chapman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action his Department will take to implement the Dunnet report on badger control.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Apple Replanting Grant

Sir John Wells asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing the percentage uptake of the apple replanting grant each year since its inception; and what sums were under consideration or otherwise outstanding at the latest convenient date.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Animal Welfare

Dr. Glyn asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to implement paragraph 37 of the Brambell report on animal welfare of 1965; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Sherry

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) why it was necessary to include provisions relating to the sale of British sherry for 10 years in the treaty of accession of Spain and Portugal to the EEC; for what reasons Her Majesty's Government agreed to the provisions of article 129 in relation to British sherry; and what discussions he had prior to the negotiations with the British sherry industry;

(2) under which part of article 43 of the treaty establishing the EEC a decision will be made in 1995 on the arrangements for use of the terms British sherry, Irish sherry and Cyprus sherry;

(3) what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken to implement the provisions of the treaty of accession of Spain and Portugal concerning the import or sale of Australian sherry in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

"Diet, Nutrition and Health"

Mr. Coombs asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he plans any changes in policy in the light of the report "Diet, Nutrition and Health" produced by the Board of Science and Education of the British Medical Association, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Sheepmeat

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each of the past six years and at the present time the difference between the support price for sheepmeat and the market price.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 21 April 1986, c. 43]: The European Community's sheepmeat regime was introduced on 20 October 1980. Support levels are set by the Council of Ministers, and expenditure is reimbursed from Community funds. The following figures show the amount by which the average market price fell short of the guide price in the relevant marketing years.:

Year	p/kg
1981-82	18·0
1982-83	56·0
1983-84	75·0
1984-85	43·0
1985-86	66·0

Before October 1980 the support arrangements for sheep were provided under the United Kingdom's fat sheep guarantee scheme. Because the change in arrangements occurred during 1980, there is no comparable figure for 1980-81. However, the avearage market price in that year fell short of an average of the guaranteed and guide prices by 15·0p/kg.

The average market price for the week beginning 14 April 1986 is currently forecast as being 6·6p/kg higher than the seasonal guide price, but because of seasonal variations this is not an indication of the eventual figure for the marketing year.

Product Sales

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for 1970, 1979 and 1985 the tonnage of each agricultural product disposed of to non-European Community countries under the common agricultural policy and the cost to the European Economic Community budget.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 21 April 1986, c. 44]: In view of the large number of commodities which are covered by the CAP, it is not practicable to give the information requested for each product. The table provides details of exports for the main commodities. The cost to the EC budget of export refunds in 1970 was 1,205 mua which cannot be directly compared with later years. Expenditure on export refunds in 1979 and 1985 was 4,732 mecu and 6,588 mecu respectively.

Council of Agriculture Ministers

Mr. Maclennan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Council of Agriculture Ministers' meeting on 21 and 22 April.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 23 April 1986, c. 163]: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made to the House earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State.

Food Sales

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what amount of food has been exported by the EEC to Libya over the most recent 12 months for which figures are available; what were the comparable figures in each of the previous four years; and what was the total of export rebates provided in respect of each year's sales respectively.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 23 April 1986, c. 164]: The information requested for the volume of EC exports to Libya of the main agricultural products is contained in the table. Information on the expenditure on export rebates to individual countries is not available.

Expenditure

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish a table in the Official Report showing the total amount spent directly and indirectly on British agriculture directly by the United Kingdom Government and indirectly under the common agricultural policy in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 24 April 1986, c. 202]: Total voted expenditure, net of receipts, by the three Agriculture Departments and the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce on agriculture, fisheries and food, including land drainage and flood protection and agency services provided by other public bodies in 1984-85, the latest year for which figures are available, was as follows:

	£ million
Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food	549
Department of Agriculture & Fisheries for Scotland	134
Welsh Office	47
Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce	313
Total	1,043

Intervention Stores (London)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the location of each intervention store in the Greater London area; and what are the amounts stored.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 24 April 1986, c. 202]: On 31 March the locations and amounts of agricultural produce in intervention stores in the Greater London area were as follows:

THE ARTS

Museums and Libraries

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Minister for the Arts if he will introduce legislation to empower him to ensure that publicly-funded museums and libraries do not allow their facilities to be used for propaganda displays by pressure groups; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: No. Decisions on the uses to which their premises and facilities may be put are properly matters for the discretion of the authorities responsible for each institution, within the framework of the relevant governing legislation. I am not aware of any significant recent cases of abuse of such facilities for political purposes, which I would deplore.

Roundhouse Black Arts Centre

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts whether he intends to take any action in respect of the future funding of the Roundhouse Black Arts Centre.

Mr. Luce [pursuant to the reply, 22 April 1986, c. 139]: The funding of arts projects is a matter for the Arts Council. I understand that the Arts Council has given £100,000 to keep the project in being, but it is essentially for the Roundhouse itself to raise the very large capital sums it is seeking in order to establish the proposed major new arts centre there.

CIVIL SERVICE

Planners and Architects

Mr. Steen asked the Minister for the Civil Service how many town and country planners and architects are employed in central Government Departments; and if he will give a breakdown by Department for each of the last five years.

Mr. Luce: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

ENVIRONMENT

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what factors were taken into account in calculating the risk to the public from any accidents that could occur during the transporting of radioactive waste in the report on the "Assessment of Best Practicable Environmental Options for Management of Low- and Intermediate-Level Solid Radioactive Wastes".

Mr. Waldegrave: Research addressed the risk to the health of the most exposed individuals affected by an accident to radioactive waste in transit and the collective risk to health in a typical urban or rural population near the scene of an accident. The results of this research are given in DOE/RW/84-195, available through the National Lending Library.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give a description of the worst case scenario associated with accidents during the transporting of nuclear waste as used for the report on the "Assessment of Best Practicable Environmental Options for Management of Low- and Intermediate-Level Solid Radioactive Wastes".

Mr. Waldegrave: Research on transport of low and intermediate-level radioactive wastes has addressed both probabilities and potential consequences of accidents. An assessment has been made of the implications of an accident in which one part in a million of the waste consignment was dispersed. The results of this research are reported in DOE/RW/85-175 and DOE/RW/84-195 available through the National Lending Library.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many visits were made (a) to possible sites for radioactive waste repositories, (b) to other nuclear installations in the United Kingdom and (c) to foreign countries, in the course of the preparation of the report on the "Assessment of the Best Practicable Environmental Options for Low- and Intermediate-Level Solid Radioactive Wastes"; and if he will list all such places visited.

Mr. Waldegrave: In the course of preparation of the report the Department's research contractors visited AERE Harwell and AEE Winfrith. Information on waste arising was obtained from all major nuclear installations in the United Kingdom. Research contractors assessing the costs and impacts of surface storage of wastes have visited operational stores in Petten (The Netherlands), Mol (Belgium), Gorleben and Karlsruhe (the Federal Republic of Germany), Leibstadt (Switzerland), Olkiluoto (Finland) and Ringhals (Sweden). No visits have been made to possible sites for radioactive waste repositories in the United Kingdom.

This research is reported in DOE/RW/85-158 available through the National Lending Library.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to investigate possible sites for deep cavity repositories for radioactive waste.

Mr. Waldegrave: NIREX were asked by my right hon. Friend in his statement on 24 January 1985 to start the search for at least three alternative sites for a deep facility for longer-lived wastes. That work continues.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in view of the recent report on the "Assessment of Best Practical Environmental Options for Management of Low- and Intermediate-Level Solid Radioactive Wastes" finding that the disposal of barium carbonate sludge in concrete lined trenches would be too close to the risk limit (table 4), he will give an assurance that this will not be allowed to occur.

Mr. Waldegrave: The acceptability of any specific type of radioactive waste for disposal in concrete-lined trenches will be assessed against the principles for the protection of the human environment, published in 1984, taking account of the characteristics of a disposal site that emerge from detailed investigations and of engineered structure proposed by UK NIREX Ltd. Should any waste pose risks that approach the limits set by the Government's authorising Department the assessment will take this factor fully into account.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much the report on the "Assessment of Best Practicable Environmental Options for Management of Low- and Intermediate-Level Solid Radioactive Wastes" cost to prepare; and how many people were employed in its preparation.

Mr. Waldegrave: The report built on research commissioned by the Department of the Environment since 1982. This underlying research has cost about £800,000 over the four years 1982 to 1986. Research specifically related to the assessment published in March this year cost about £150,000. Eighteen independent scientific consultants were involved in the assessment, under the direction of one of the professional staff in the Department of the Environment. Scientists and other officials from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Department of Health and Social Security, the National Radiological Protection Board, and Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate were also consulted in the preparation of the report.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the data on which his Department's study to establish the best practicable environmental options for the management of low and intermediate level radioactive waste was based.

Mr. Waldegrave: Reports on the research and data on which the assessment was based are available through the National Lending Library, Boston Spa, West Yorkshire. A full list of research reports is given in section 9 of the assessment report. Copies of these research reports are also kept by the Department of the Environment for consultation on request.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the light of the answer of 25 February, Official Report, column 505, he has anything to add to the reply of 21 April to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby, in so far as it relates to the possibility of sites operated by the Nuclear Industry Radioactive Waste Executive being used for waste from the reprocessing of United Kingdom-produced spent fuel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: There are no current plans to use a near-surface disposal facility developed by NIREX for wastes ensuing from reprocessed United Kingdom spent fuel. These wastes will continue to be disposed of at Drigg and at Dounreay. These sites do, however, have a finite capacity and it is therefore possible that in the distant future reprocessing wastes could be put into a NIREX site, assuming they meet the terms of its authorisation.

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the difference in cost between shallow burial of low and intermediate short-lived radioactive waste and under sea bed burial of low and intermediate short-lived radioactive waste.

Mr. Waldegrave: The unit costs of disposal assuming a utilisation of disposal routes in line with design capacities are derived from information provided by NIREX and from ENSEC Ltd.

Disposal option	Cost of packaged waste disposal £ per cu metre
Shallow burial	25 (Drigg)
Near surface trench disposal	125 (LLW)
	615 (ILW)
Off-shore borehole disposal	2,600

Further details are given in "Assessment of Best Practical Environmental Options (BPEO's) for Management of Low and Intermediate-Level Solid Radioactive Wastes", Her Majesty's Stationery Office, March 1986.

Estimates of disposal costs are of course under continuing review by UK NIREX Limited.

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to reply to the letter dated 7 April from the secretary of Humberside Against Nuclear Dumping requesting a meeting with him and representatives of that organisation.

Mrs. Rumbold: I have written to HAND today, agreeing to a meeting.

General Development Order

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will amend the general development order so that agricultural buildings cannot be erected within a sensitive conservation area without planning permission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: No. It is, however, open to local planning authorities to make directions under article 4 of the General Development Order (GDO) if they consider that agricultural or other buildings should not be erected in specific locations without specific permission. We announced on 26 March that we propose to introduce a new special development order to give all National Park Authorities in England and Wales discretion to require approval of the design, external appearance and siting of farm and forestry buildings and roads, where such development is carried out as permitted development under the GDO.

Judicial Reviews

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the number of judicial reviews in which his Department has been involved since 1 March 1974; and on how many occasions the court of final recourse has found against him.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Proceedings instituted against me as Secretary of State are primarily handled by the Treasury Solicitor's Department as are most other proceedings against Ministers of the Crown and Government Departments. No departmental tally is kept except in relation to planning cases, of the number of actions brought, whether by way of judicial review or otherwise. Most planning cases involve an appeal under statute not judicial review proceedings in the technical sense. A recent assessment of Department of Environment litigation in the last two years produced the following figures:

Subject	Won	Lost
Planning	111	71
Other	11	5

If statistics could be produced for the period from 1 March 1974 onwards, it would be only at disproportionate expense.

Derelict Land

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many orders relating to derelict land have been made by his Department in each of the last five years; how many acres were affected in each year; and if he will list the total number of acres on the registers of derelict land in each of the last three years and the current number of acres on the register.

Sir George Young: The register referred to contains records of unused and under-used land owned by public bodies and is compiled under powers set out in part X of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980. My right hon. Friend has no powers to make orders relating to derelict land. Information about land on the land registers is as follows:

	Year
	1983	1984	1985	*1986
Notices issued under Section 99 of the 1980 Act	†Nil	9	50	48
Area of land affected (acres)	Nil	47	338	182
Area of land on register as at 31 December (acres)	101,000	104,000	106,000	—

Notes:
* Up to 25 April 1986.
† Notices were not issued prior to 1984.

There is a continuous flow of land onto and off the register.

There was 107,000 acres on the register on 31 March 1986.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the application by Glanford and Scunthorpe borough councils for a derelict land grant to reclaim the old Normanby Park steelworks site.

Sir George Young: I shall answer this question shortly.

Planners and Architects

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about the number of town and country planners and architects who were employed in local government in each of the last three years; and if he will give a breakdown by local authority.

Mr. Tracey: This information is not available centrally.

Acid Rain

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent discussions he has had with his European counterparts about acid rain and the United Kingdom joining the 30 per cent. club.

Mrs. Rumbold: My hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment, Countryside and Local Government recently discussed these subjects with Mrs. Surlien, the Norwegian Environment Minister. The outcome of these discussions was announced in the answer given by my hon. Friend to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on Monday 21 April.

There are continuing discussions within the European Community about proposals to limit air pollution from large combustion plants; the matter was most recently discussed at the Council of Environment Ministers on 6 March.

County Hall (Tourist Centre)

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to the answer given on 22 April, Official Report, column 111, by the hon. Member for Rossendale and Darwen (Mr. Trippier) he will list the potential purchasers who have expressed an interest in county hall and the uses they each have in mind.

Mr. Tracey: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 9 December 1985 at column 477.

Aggregate Exchequer Grant

Mr. Orme asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the saving to the Exchequer from the reduction of grant percentage (settlement) from 61 per cent. in 1980-81 to 48·7 per cent. in 1985-86.

Mrs. Rumbold: The level of aggregate exchequer grant is determined each year in relation to estimated local authority relevant expenditure and it is not possible to know what local authorities would have spent if a different proportion of relevant expenditure were met by grant. However, if grant were paid at 61 per cent. of the estimated relevant expenditure as set out in each of the rate support grant settlement reports from 1980-81, then the total available would be £8·25 billion more than shown in those reports.

Government Car Pool (Petrol)

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much the Property Services Agency pays for a gallon of petrol for the car pool currently; and how much was being paid before the Budget statement.

Sir George Young: The Crown Suppliers purchase fuel from two different sources; with agency credit cards where the price will fluctuate between different garages and areas; and through a bulk commercial contract where the information is commercial in confidence.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total gallonage of petrol consumed by the Government car pool in each of the years 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Sir George Young: I regret that part of this information is unavailable and the balance cannot be supplied without disproportionte cost.

Midland Hotel, Bradford

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what steps he is taking to secure the repayment of urban development grant paid to Midland Hotel (Bradford) Ltd and Electra Investment Trust plc for refurbishments at the Midland hotel, Bradford, in the light of the voluntary liquidation of Midland Hotel (Bradford) Ltd; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how much urban development grant was offered to Midland Hotel (Bradford) Ltd. and Electra Investment Trust plc to refurbish 34 bedrooms at the Midland hotel, Bradford; how much has been paid to date; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Urban development grant approval was given in June 1985 to a contribution of £250,000 proposed to be made by the City of Bradford metropolitan district council towards refurbishment of the Midland hotel, Bradford. I understand that no grant has been or will be paid. The question of recovery does not therefore arise.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what appraisal was made when urban development grant was offered to Midland Hotel (Bradford) Ltd and the Electra Investment Trust plc in 1985 of both companies; what guarantees were given by both companies; what undertakings were given in the event of either, or both companies disposing of its interest in the Midland hotel, Bradford, or either company going into voluntary liquidation; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Appraisal of the application for urban development grant was carried out on the basis set out in the Department's guidance notes. The financial circumstances of prospective recipients of urban development grant are investigated in the course of appraisals and, where appropriate, conditions are attached to offers of grant requiring guarantees to be given by holding of associate companies or the repayment of grant on disposal of grant-aided assets of failure to complete the project. For reasons of commercial confidentiality, it is not the practice to disclose the terms of individual offers of grant.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department carried out an appraisal of Midland Hotel (Bradford) Ltd. and the Electra Investment Trust plc, prior to these companies being offered urban development grant in 1985 to refurbish bedrooms at the Midland hotel, Bradford.

Sir George Young: Appraisal of the application submitted by the City of Bradford metropolitan district council on behalf of Midland Hotel (Bradford) Ltd. and negotiation with the parties took place between submission of the application in 1984 and the grant approval in June 1985.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Personal Taxation

Mr. Cartwright asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the yield from income tax on earnings over £30,000 per year in 1979-80; what is this figure at 1985 prices; and what was the equivalent yield in 1984-85, expressed in 1985 prices.

Mr. Moore: I regret the delay in providing this reply. Estimates are available in terms of the income tax liabilities of taxpayers with gross income rather than earnings of over £30,000 and with the incomes of married couples combined. In 1979-80, the yield from taxpayers with incomes over £30,000 per year was £1,150 million — £1,850 million at 1985-86 prices. The equivalent level of income after adjusting for price inflation would be £45,800 in 1984-85. Tax yield in that year from incomes above that level is estimated to be £2,600 million — £2,750 million at 1985-86 prices.

Customs and Excise (Personal Data)

Mr. Cohen asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what records will be kept by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise when personal data, supplied to them via the non-disclosure provisions of section 28 of the Data Protection Act, are passed on to other Government Departments; and what written statement will be sent to the data user by Customs and Excise to show that the disclosure of personal data was by that route.

Mr. Brooke: When personal data, including those supplied under section 28 of the Data Protection Act, are passed to other Government Departments, Customs and Excise retains local files showing the data which have been provided. Where the need to disclose such data under section 28(3) arises, the covering letter will declare that that is so.

Wool Products

Mr. Steel asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the circumstances of references made on customs sheets on imports to certain amounts of wool products being noted as imported from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lawson: It is quite normal for wool products produced in, and exported from, the United Kingdom to be subsequently reimported into the United Kingdom. For example, reimportation may occur where the goods were found to be surplus to requirements or not up to specification. Because there was some suggestion that the level of reimports of wool products is higher than might be expected, Customs and Excise has made a detailed examination of a number of documents relating particularly to imports of large consignments of wool products in 1985 where the country of origin was declared as the United Kingdom. In no case were any grounds found for doubting the declared country of origin.

Capital Transfer Tax

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a list of the changes made in capital transfer tax in each Finance Act since 1979, and indicate in each case the cost in terms of revenue forgone.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he proposes to take in the light of the European Commission's application to the European Court for a ruling to compel the United Kingdom to extend value added tax to new houses, fuel and other items which are currently zero-rated.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Tax Changes (Gains)

Mr. Meacher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will specify the distribution of gains in the Budget from each item where tax changes were made other than normal indexation, according to income bands as follows: less than £5,000 per year, £5,000 to £7,500, £7,500 to £10,000, £10,000 to £12,500, £12,500 to £15,000, £15,000 to £20,000, £20,000 to £30,000, £30,000 to £50,000 and above £50,000; and if he will indicate the percentage of total tax changes accruing to each group and the percentage of the total numbers of taxpayers that each group comprises.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 9 April 1986, c. 124]: Information in the form requested is available only for income tax changes and is as follows:

Range of gross income*	†Tax units as percentage of total liable to tax	Reduction in income tax liability in 1986-87 from Budget proposals compared with indexation

Mr. Meacher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the gain to taxpayers at less than half, half to three-quarters, three-quarters to one, one to one and a half, one and a half to two, two to three, three to five and five to 10, and more than 10 times average earnings from the 1p cut in income tax; if he will specify these bands in £ sterling per year at current earnings; how many taxpayers are in each of these bands; and what percentage of the total number of taxpayers each group comprises.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 9 April 1986, c. 124]: Information on the effect of the Budget proposals compared with statutory indexation on tax liabilities for 1986-87 is shown in the following table. This includes the effect of the reduction of one penny in the basic rate of income tax and the increases of less than statutory indexation in the second and subsequent higher rate thresholds. The information is analysed by range of gross income, rather than earnings and the ranges are based on multiples of an illustrative figure for average adult male full time earnings of £213·80 per week at £11,118 per annum for 1986-87.

Estimates of numbers of tax units in each income range are derived by projecting data to 1986-87 from the 1983-84 survey of personal income. They are subject to a margin of error; and a reliable estimate of those with incomes above 10 times average earnings cannot be produced.

EC (Budget)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year since 1972 and the forecast for 1986 the amount of the gross contribution to the European Economic Community budget broken down into value added tax, customs duties and other imposts, together with the receipts under various heads, including any rebates.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 21 April 1986, c. 39]: Details of the United Kingdom's contributions to and receipts from the Community budget are given in the Official Journal of the European Communities, "Annual Report by the Court of Auditors". The copies covering the period 1973 to 1984 are in the Library of the House. The figures for 1985 (outturn) and 1986 are given below. The contributions figures for 1986 are based on the 1986 budget, though they exclude any contribution to the disputed elements of the budget adopted by the European Parliament. No forecast of our receipts in calendar year 1986 has been made, though figures for 1986-87 were published in the last public expenditure White Paper, Cmnd 9702.

Taxation

Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of tax units (households) are paying less income tax and national insurance contributions as a proportion of gross earnings in 1985-86 than in 1978-79.

Mr. Rooker asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr, 27 March, Official Report, columns 607-10, he will publish a table for each taxpayer group shown there, showing at what multiple of average earnings the percentage of tax plus national insurance is the same for 1986-87 as it was in 1978-79 stating the figure used for average earnings in 1986-87; and how many taxpayers in each group fall above and below this figure.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his replies, 24 February 1986, c. 493, and 16 April 1986, c. 418]: I regret the delay in replying to these questions. The first table shows the ranges of earnings within which income tax plus national insurance contributions form a smaller proportion of gross earnings in 1985-86 than in 1978-79, assuming that earnings have risen in line with the national average, and the equivalent comparison for 1986-87. The information is shown for five family types including the four in the question from the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr. The proportion of tax and national insurance is the same as in 1978-79 at the income levels specified. The values of average earnings used for these comparisons are £92·80, £199·80 and £213·80 per week for 1978-79, 1985-86 and 1986-87, respectively.

In both 1985-86 and 1986-87 at all income levels those whose earnings have risen in line with the national average have seen a real increase in their take home pay since 1978-79.

Ranges of earnings where income tax† and NIC‡ form a smaller proportion of gross earnings in 1985-86 and 1986-87 than in 1978-79 under the assumptions in the footnotes below*

¶ Percentage of joint income.

The second table shows the numbers of single people and married couples whose main source of income is earnings from employment by ranges of earnings corresponding to the break-even points in the first table for single people, one-earner married couples and two-earner married couples (with two children). But many of the taxpayers in the middle ranges will not pay a higher proportion of their income in tax and national insurance since they also receive investment income which is not subject to national insurance contributions. The proportion depends also on other allowances and reliefs which may be available against tax and on whether the individual is contracted-in or contracted-out of the earnings-related part of the national insurance scheme. The comparisons for individual married couples also depend on the number of children and the split of earnings between the spouses. I regret that it is not currently possible to provide a comprehensive analysis comparing income tax and NIC regimes which would allow for all of these factors.

DEFENCE

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has about the latest trend in scientific opinion in the United States regarding the feasibility and practicability of the strategic defence initiative project.

Mr. Norman Lamont: These matters will be determined by the results of the research programme now under way for that purpose.

Nuclear Tests (Australia)

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the transcripts of the hearing of the Australian Royal Commission on British nuclear tests have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 19 April 1985 at column 279. A copy of the Royal Commission's report is available in the Library.

I will make arrangements for a complete set of transcripts, which amount to 10,424 pages, to be placed in the Public Records Office.

NATO Nuclear Planning Group

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence what improvement measures, as referred to in the NATO Nuclear Planning Group's final communiqué of 21 March, paragraph 6, are currently being undertaken by Britain.

Mr. Stanley: The Trident programme. Apart from that I cannot add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Central (Mr. Caborn) on 20 January at columns 90-91.

Defence Equipment

Mr. Douglas asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list details and costs of the current international collaborative projects for defence equipment entered into by his Department.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My answer to the hon. Member for Blaydon (Mr. McWilliam) on 11 February, at columns 448-52, detailed the collaborative equipment projects in progress at that time in which the United Kingdom is participating with other European countries. I shall write to the hon. Member with supplementary information.

Mr. Douglas asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the nations with which his Department has a memorandum of understanding for the purchases of defence equipment.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall answer shortly.

Royal Ordnance Factories

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost of redundancies to the royal ordnance factories for the year 1985-86.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Such information about Royal Ordnance plc's operations is a matter for the company.

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated value of the royal ordnance factories.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In accordance with the scheme made under the Ordnance Factories and Military Services Act 1984, a copy of which was laid before the House, a valuation of the property, rights and liabilities transferred to Royal Ordnance plc on 2 January 1985 is being prepared and will be certified by the reporting accountants appointed for the task. This certificate is expected to be available soon.

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will give the name of the consultants preparing the sale of the royal ordnance factories; and what safeguards he has asked for relating to the sale of royal ordnance factories to non-British shareholders;

(2) if he will list the royal ordnance factories which (a) have and (b) have not been offered guaranteed contracts in 1986-87;

(3) how he will satisfy himself that foreigners do no exceed their quota of 15 per cent. of royal ordnance shares by way of holding companies.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall answer shortly.

Auxiliary Oiler Replenishment Contract

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Defence what account he proposes to take, in allocating contract for an AOR vessel, of the employment prospects of secondary suppliers to Swan Hunter, such as Walter Kidd Ltd., Northolt; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State said in the House on 24 April 1986, at column 434, Swan Hunter Shipbuilders will be given a preferential opportunity to bid for the second ship of the class on the basis that it will be to the same design as the first AOR and that the terms and conditions, cost and programme will be no less favourable to the MOD than already available from the lead shipyard for a follow-on ship.

Within the limitations of this framework, the choice of subcontractors will be a matter for Swan Hunter Shipbuilders to determine.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Government's policy with regard to (a) the proposed modernisation of United States binary chemical weapons and (b) the case for a North Atlantic Treaty Organisation chemical deterrent.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the right hon. Member for Llanelli (Mr. Davies) earlier today.

Foreign Service Personnel

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Defence what regulations govern the conduct of service personnel of foreign nations on the public streets in Britain; what regulations govern the carrying of weapons on public streets by such people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: Service personnel of foreign nations on the public streets in Britain are subject to the offence-making provisions of British law in the same way as British service men are. However, the system of law under which they are dealt with for their misconduct will depend upon the terms of the Visiting Forces Act 1952 and how it applies to the facts of the case. The carriage of arms by members of visiting forces in Britain is governed by the provisions of the Visiting Forces and International Headquarters (Application of Law) Order 1965 (SI 1965/1536).

EMPLOYMENT

Work Creation Schemes

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General if he will publish references to all the available research studies sponsored by his Department that have examined the effect of (i) the young workers' scheme, (ii) the enterprise allowance scheme, (iii) the community programme, (iv) the YTS and (v) the small firms loan guarantee scheme; and if he will indicate the measures the Government are taking to monitor the effects of the new workers' scheme and the jobstart scheme.

Mr. Lang: The informaton is as follows:

(i) A summary of research on the young workers scheme was sent to the Employment Committee on 10 April and details of available research will be published in the next issue of the Employment Gazette. Surveys of the young workers scheme in 1983 and 1985 were conducted by the Social and Community Planning Research for the Department and published. The Institute of Manpower Studies produced a commentary on the young workers scheme, (Number 16), IMS 1982.

(ii) Two articles on the enterprise allowance scheme have been published in the Employment Gazette: "Evaluation of the pilot Enterprise Allowance Scheme", August 1984, and "An Evaluation of the Enterprise Allowance Scheme", August 1985. Two reports by Social and Community Planning Research, are in the House of Commons Library: "People on the Enterprise Allowance", January 1984, and "Two years after the Enterprise Allowance", December 1985.

(iii) Surveys of community programme participants and ex-participants are regularly placed in the Library of the House.

Those published since the start of the programme are "Survey of Community Programme Participants", Autumn 1983, Spring 1984 and Autumn 1984. Postal follow up surveys were published in December 1984 and November 1985.

In addition a survey of community programme sponsors was published in April 1984 and on 14th April this year the report "Value for Money in the Community Programme" was published and copies are in the Library.

(iv) YTS follow-up reports are regularly filed in the House of Commons Library. A survey of YTS providers was published in the Employment Gazette in August 1985 and two papers have been published in the Manpower Services Commission's R and D series: "Ethnic Minorities and the Youth Training Scheme", No. 20, and "A review of the ITEC programme. Its role in YTS and options for the future", No. 27.

(v) The Department of Employment took over responsibility for the loan guarantee scheme from the Departmnt of Trade and Industry in September 1985. The Department of Trade and Industry published five studies of the scheme: "Interim Assessment of the Small Business Loan Guarantee Scheme", July 1982; "An analysis of some early claims under the Small Business Loan Guarantee Scheme", 1983; "Commentary on a Telephone Survey of Borrowers", 1983; "Commentary on a telephone survey of borrowers financed under the Small Business Loan Guarantee Scheme" 1984; and "A Study of Businesses Financed under the Small Business Loan Guarantee Scheme", 1984.

We expect to monitor the new workers scheme in the same way as we have been monitoring the young workers scheme; we are closely monitoring the response to the jobstart allowance, including the number of successful and unsuccessful applications, in each of the nine pilot areas.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General what were the numbers of redundancies, the numbers of new jobs and the numbers and average rates of unemployment for each year since 1977 for the Grimsby travel-to-work area, the Scunthorpe travel-to-work area and the Lincoln travel-to-work area.

Mr. Lang: Following is the available information. Table 1 gives the numbers of redundancies confirmed as due to occur for each of the years requested. Information about total job gains and total job losses is not available from the Department's statistics, but an indication of the net changes can be seen by comparing the levels of employment at different dates. For the individual former travel-to-work areas requested the available information, which comes from the census of employment and relates to net changes in employees in employment, is in table 2. Table 3 gives the available unemployment statistics which are also in the Library. The figures are not comparable over the whole period because of the change in travel-to-work boundaries, the change in the basis of the unemployment count in October 1982, and the 1983 Budget provisions which meant that certain men, mainly aged 60 and over, no longer need to sign on to obtain benefit.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each EEC country the numbers employed in the steel, coal, textile, clothing, shoe, man-made fibre, shipbuilding and motor-vehicle industries, together with the corresponding figures for 1972.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is available in published form. The latest available data for most countries relate to 1983, and the earliest on a consistent basis relate to 1974. They are contained in "Employment and Unemployment 1985", published by the statistical office of the European Communities, a copy of which is in the Library. The relevant information for production and preliminary processing of metals (including the steel industry) is on page 138, for extraction and briquetting of solid fuels and coke ovens (approximating to the coal industry) on page 134, for the textile industry on page 146, for the clothing and footwear industries (combined) on page 147, for the man-made fibres industry on page 140, for manufacture of other means of transport (which includes shipbuilding) on page 144, and for manufacture of motor vehicles etc. on page 143.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the number of full-time employees in the labour force each year since 1970, divided into male and female and non-adult; and if he will provide similar information for part-time workers.

Mr. Lang: Information is not available in the exact form requested.

The available information from the regular quarterly employees in employment series is presented in table 1 below.

The labour force survey provides information on a different basis, but allows an analysis by age. The available information, relating to years in which the survey has been carried out since 1979, is given in table 2 below.

Note:

In this table a part-time employee is defined as one who normally works for 30 hours or less. The full-time, part-time split for males is available only at dates for which a Census of Employment was conducted.

At the Census for Employment in September 1981 there were 12,229,000 male employees of whom 11,511,000 were full-time and 9,085,000 females of whom 5,304,000 were full-time.

* The Labour Force Survey estimates relate to the spring of each year. Figures for 1985 exclude those employees on Government schemes, whereas earlier years include those on schemes if reported as in employment as an employee.

† In this table an employee is shown as full-time or part-time according to whether he considers his job to be a full or part-time job.

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Paymaster General if he will give the latest unemployment figures, on a non-seasonally adjusted basis, for (a) Great Britain and (b) Scotland; and if he will compare them with the similar figures for (i) the EEC countries as a whole, (ii) Norway, (iii) Sweden, (iv) Finland and (v) Austria.

Mr. Lang: The figures are based on national definitions, using different methods of compilation, and should not be used for the purposes of comparison. The available information for February is given in the following table.

Unemployment: February 1986

	Total (thousands)	Percentage rate
Great Britain*	3,212	13·6

*For Great Britain and Scotland the latest figures for March are 3,199·4 (13·6 per cent.) and 359·3 (15·9 per cent.) respectively.

†January figures.

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Paymaster General what was the total number of persons registered at jobcentres in January 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Lang: The following table gives the total numbers of persons (employed and unemployed) registered at jobcentres in Great Britain for the dates requested. From October 1982 it has not been necessary to register as a condition of claiming benefit, nor is it necessary to register in order to use the jobcentre.

	Number
January 1979	1,416,958
January 1980	1,450,451
January 1981	2,242,316
January 1982	2,803,832
January 1983	2,626,618
January 1984	1,011,886
January 1985	543,596
January 1986	419,842

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Paymaster General what was the number of persons included in the unemployment figures or in receipt of supplementary benefit who had a part-time job in January in 1979, 1983 and 1986.

Mr. Lang: Figures are not collected in the form requested, but the number of supplementary benefit claimants who had earnings of their own (as distinct from the earnings of a partner) taken into account in the benefit assessment were about 40,000 in November 1979 and 126,000 in December 1983. Figures for 1986 are not available.

While these figures will include some claimants who are included in the unemployment count, the total number of persons in the count who had a part-time job is not available from the administrative sources. However, according to the labour force survey, there were about 90,000 claimants in the unemployment count who had a part-time job in the spring of 1983. Figures are not available for 1979, not yet for 1986.

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Paymaster General whether he is satisfied with the accuracy of the returns submitted by Central regional council for calculating the level of unemployment in the Stirling constituency.

Mr. Lang: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Paymaster General if he will publish the latest unemployment figures, on a non-seasonally adjusted basis for (a) England, (b) Scotland, (c) Wales and (d) Northern Ireland.

Mr. Lang: The following information is in the Library. The numbers of unemployed claimants as at 6 March 1986 were:

	Number
England	2,655,808
Scotland	359,318
Wales	184,247
Northern Ireland	124,403

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Paymaster General what is his latest estimate of the number of persons who have more than one job.

Mr. Lang: Preliminary results from the 1985 labour force survey indicate that in the spring of 1985 775,000 people had a second job, either as an employee or self employed, in addition to their main activity.

Unemployment Benefit Offices and Jobcentres

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General if he will give details of the numbers employed at the latest date for which figures are available and the comparative figures annually since 1979 in the following offices in Lancashire: (a) unemployment benefit offices and (b) jobcentres.

Mr. Lang: At 1 April each year the following numbers of permanent and casual staff were employed in the administrative county of Lancashire, excluding Greater Manchester and Merseyside:

	(a) Unemployment benefit offices	(b) Jobcentres
1979	431	—
1980	381	—
1981	526	—

1984	461	294·5
1985	468	289
1986	459	281·5

Information about the number of staff employed in Jobcentres in Lancashire from 1979 to 1981 is no longer available.

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General if he will give details of the numbers employed in the Burnley constituency at the latest date for which figures are available and comparative figures annually from 1979 in (a) jobcentres and (b) unemployment benefit offices.

Mr. Lang: At 1 April each year the following permanent and casual staff were employed in offices in the Burnley constituency.

(a) Jobcentres

	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the numbers currently employed in the sub-divisions of manufacturing industry, together with the corresponding figures for 1973 and 1979; and if he will add the peak figure for employment since 1956 together with the date the peak was reached.

Mr. Lang: The latest figures are as follows. Comparable estimates are not available for the same months in each of the years specified.

Employees in Employment in the Manufacturing Industries in Great Britain (Standard Industrial Classification 1980. Unadjusted for seasonal variations)

	Division 2 (Other mineral and ore extraction etc)	Division 3 (Metal goods, engineering and vehicles)	Division 4 (Other manufacturing industries)

June 1979	1,125,000	3,330,000	2,659,000
February 1986	777,000	2,561,000	2,037,000

In December 1979 the employed labour force in Great Britain was 24,940,000; its highest point in any of the years from 1956 to date. The employed labour force is the sum of employees in employment, the self employed, and Her Majesty's Forces.

Crown Immunity

Mr. Ashley asked the Paymaster General how many Crown notices have been issued to hospitals in each of the last five years; and to what aspects of health and safety they referred.

Mr. Lang: The information is given in the table. Figures for 1985 are not yet available.

Mr. Ashley asked the Paymaster General what representations he has received regarding the removal of Crown immunity in respect of health and safety legislation; what response he has made; if he will prepare legislation to remove immunity: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Since my hon. Friend's reply to the right hon. Member on 21 January at column 126 we have received six further letters regarding the removal of Crown immunity in respect of health and safety legislation. We have considered these representations carefully. The Crown is not immune from the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act itself; only from the Act's enforcement procedures. Where comparison between Crown and non-Crown establishments is possible it appears to the Health and Safety Executive, based on the experience of its inspectors, that no significant difference in standards of health and safety exists. We are not convinced that any change in the Crown's position under health and safety legislation is justified and will not be preparing legislation. We will, however, keep the issue under review.

Mr. Ashley asked the Paymaster General on how many occasions individual employees of the Crown have been prosecuted under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act; and if he will categorise them according to the section of the Act under which the prosecution arose.

Mr. Lang: Two employees of the Crown have been prosecuted under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. Both prosecutions arose from the same incident in 1979 for offences under regulation 58(3) of the Shipbuilding and Shiprepairing Regulations 1960.

Mr. Ashley asked the Paymaster General (1) how many Crown notices have been issued over the last five years in each of the areas of Crown employment;

(2) how many (a) Crown notices and (b) non-Crown notices have been issued in each of the last five years; and if he will express the figures in terms of the number of notices per thousand workers covered.

Mr. Lang: The best information now available is as follows:

Enforcement notices issued by enforcing authorities

	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1980-84
Crown notices
(a) to Health authorities	29	99	94	49	32	303
(b) to others	6	17	15	11	16	65

Non-Crown notices	15,863	15,372	16,005	16,012	15,816	79,068

Figures for 1985 are not yet available.

It is estimated that in 1983, 0·04 Crown notices per thousand employees in Crown premises were issued, and 0·8 non-Crown notices per thousand employees in non-Crown premises.

Tourism

Mr. Adley asked the Paymaster General if, in seeking to promote tourism from the United States of America, he will make it his policy to use every opportunity open to him to highlight the fact that the level of homicide and violence in the United States of America far exceeds that in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I am well aware of my hon. Friend's concern about this issue and I can assure him that we shall do all we can to reassure potential American visitors that Britain is a safe destination. We shall certainly exploit every appropriate opportunity to put the risk from terrorism in its proper context.

Sheltered Employment

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Paymaster General what was the number of severely disabled claimants included in the unemployment figures who would not normally be able to obtain employment except under sheltered conditions in January 1979, 1983 and 1986.

Mr. Lang: The information requested has not been available since October 1982. At that time they numbered about 23,000.

ACAS

Mr. Conway asked the Paymaster General when the Secretary of State for Employment expects to receive the annual report of the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My right hon. and noble Friend and I have received the ACAS report for 1985, which will be laid before both Houses of Parliament tomorrow. The report is also published tomorrow and copies will then be available from the Vote Office.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Grocery Retailers

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give, for the last year for which figures are available, the number of single outlet grocery retailers in existence; and if he will investigate the future trend in the number of such retailers.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The provisional results of the retailing inquiry for 1984 indicate that there were then about 30,000 single outlet grocery retailers. Estimates of the numbers of such retailers in future will be available periodically from the retailing inquiries conducted by the Business Statistics Office.

EC (Foreign Investment)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will bring up to date tables 6 to 9 on foreign investment in the evidence submitted by Her Majesty's Treasury to the Treasury and Civil Service Committee on 9 November 1984 in response to the Committee's inquiry on the financial and economic consequences of United Kingdom membership of the EEC.

Mr. Butcher: The available information is given in the tables.

EC (Trade Statistics)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what share of the United Kingdom market for office machinery and data processing equipment is taken by imports from the EC; and if he will provide estimates for each year since 1970.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information available is given in the table.

Share of EC imports in the United Kingdom market for office machinery and data processing equipment

Notes:
EC imports are imports from the eleven other members of the Community.
Office machinery and data processing equipment is defined as Class 33 of the Standard Industrial Classification (SIC80).

Food Imports

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the proportion of United Kingdom food imports supplied by the principal food-exporting countries in 1970 and in 1985, together with the United Kingdom's share of the supplying countries' imports of manufactures.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information for 1985 is not yet available. Figures for 1970 and 1984 are in the table.

VS Export Control Regulations

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his policy in relation to the United States export control regulations which take effect on 24 April.

Mr. Alan Clark: Companies and persons doing business in the United Kingdom should be guided by United Kingdom law and their own commercial judgment.

Steel

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the production of steel in each European Economic Community country in 1970 and in the latest 12 months for which figures are available, together with figures showing the steel-making capacity in each case.

Westland plc

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will appoint inspectors under section 456 of the Companies Act 1985 to investigate allegations of an illegal concert party in relation to share dealings in Westland plc in early 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I assume the hon. Member means section 442. I propose to consider in the light of the findings of the Stock Exchange Special Committee, and those of Westland's own inquiries which I understand are nearing their conclusion, whether any action by my Department is required.

Ultraleisure

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) why the credit limit for Ultraleisure over the period 1979 to 1981 was continually increased; what account was taken in reaching these decisions as to the appropriateness of the company's export turnover; and why a further increase was specifically approved by a senior officer;

(2) whether the full facts concerning the credit limits approved for and the export turnover of Ultraleisure were known to the Export Credits Guarantee Department throughout the period 1979-81.

Mr. Alan Clark: Certain aspects of the involvement of this company with the Export Credits Guarantee Department are the subject of police investigation. In these circumstances, it would be inappropriate for me to give the information requested.

WALES

Hearing Aids (Waiting List)

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the present waiting list for appointments to attend the ear, nose and throat clinics for patients requiring hearing aids; and what is the waiting list, after such an examination, for the patient to be supplied with the apparatus in each of the Welsh health authorities.

Mr. Mark Robinson: This information is not available centrally.

ENERGY

Petrol Prices

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish a table showing the average price per litre on 1 January and 1 April of petrol on sale in London, together with such information as he has about the price in Paris, Bonn, Rome, Athens, Tokyo, Los Angeles, Chicago and New York.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The data are not available in the form requested. Sample petrol prices for the relevant European countries on the available dates nearest to those requested are as follows. Similar data are not available for Japan or the United States of America.

Mr. Allen Adams asked the Secretary of State for energy what information he has about the current average retail profit margin on petrol sales; what information he has about regional variations in the retail price of petrol within the United Kingdom; if he will seek powers to limit such regional variations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The information is not available in the form requested. There is a wide variation in petrol prices at present, both locally and between regions. I do not intend to seek powers to limit these variations.

Mr. Allen Adams asked the Secretary of State for energy what information he has about the trend in the retail price of petrol in Scotland since 19 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: Petrol prices have fallen throughout the United Kingdom over recent weeks and are now below the levels predicted by the Chancellor in his Budget statement.

Oil Products

Mr. Allen Adams asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will seek powers to limit the retail price of oil products; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: No.

Oil and Gas Developments

Mr. Knowles asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he will publish his next report on oil and gas developments in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I have published the latest edition of the "Brown Book", and have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library of the House and the Vote Office stores. The report gives a detailed account of oil and gas development in 1985.

Coal Industry

Mr. Powley asked the Secretary of State for Energy what financial support he made available to the coal industry in 1985-86.

Mr. Peter Walker: The coal industry received the following support from public funds during 1985-86:

	£ million
Social Grants	212
Deficit Grant	695
Payments to individuals under the Redundant Mineworkers Payments Scheme	564
	1,471

In addition, the National Coal Board will accrue in its accounts for 1985-86 substantial further sums in respect of deficit grant and social grants which will be paid in later years.

PRIME MINISTER

Severn Bridge

Q48. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Prime Minister if she will introduce legislation to extend the boundaries of Wales to ensure that the Secretary of State for Wales has responsibility for the Severn bridge.

The Prime Minister: No. The importance of the existing bridge and the need to maintain a first-class road crossing of the Severn is fully recognised by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is closely involved in all matters concerning the existing bridge and the present studies for a second Severn crossing.

Sovereign Bases, Cyprus

Q102. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if she is now satisfied with security at the United Kingdom sovereign bases on Cyprus, in the light of the recent trial of service men of 9 Signals Regiment; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: As I informed the House on 12 November 1985, at column 101, I have asked the Security Commission to consider the adequacy of the measures already in hand for improving security at 9 Signals Regiment. I await the commission's report.

Northern Ireland (Public Services)

Mr. Wigley asked the Prime Minister what is the estimated total cost of maintaining civil and military services in Northern Ireland for the current year.

The Prime Minister: The estimated cost of public services for 1986-87 is best represented by the public expenditure planning total for Northern Ireland (£4,521 million) as shown in Cmnd. 9702, plus expenditure in Northern Ireland by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (£66 million) and expenditure by the Northern Ireland Court Service (£15 million). The additional cost of the army's task in Northern Ireland for 1986-87 is estimated at £150 million.

YTS Trainees

Mr. Lawler asked the Prime Minister how many YTS trainees are currently on a scheme with a Government Department or a sponsored non-departmental public body, listed by Department; and how many two-year places they have provided.

The Prime Minister: The number of places available on the YTS within the Civil Service in November 1985, the latest available date, was as follows:

	Places
Ministry of Defence	875
Departments of the Environment and Transport	30
Home Office	5
Inland Revenue	12
Ordnance Survey	25
Property Services Agency	30
Scottish Office	30
Department of Trade and Industry	39

There are no two-year programmes currently running in the Civil Service. In addition to the above, some Departments offer work experience places to young people on YTS schemes operated by other managing agents, and sponsored non-departmental bodies offer an estimated 400 places on YTS either as managing agent or as placement providers.

Mr. Lawler asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement regarding negotiations between her office, the Manpower Services Commission and trade unions concerning the creation of wider opportunities for young people to train with a Government Department through YTS.

The Prime Minister: In November 1983 the Cabinet Office (Management and Personnel Office) concluded with the Council of Civil Service Unions a national framework agreement for the operation of the youth training scheme within the Civil Service. Two-year YTS has not changed this formal position, and that agreement still stands. None the less, and despite there being some 1,000 places available on YTS now, progress on promoting YTS in the Civil Service at large has been severely limited by the opposition of some Civil Service trade unions, mainly at local and departmental levels. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment, my right hon. and learned Friend the Paymaster General and my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Privy Council Office are seeking by every means possible to remove this impasse to the full implementation of an existing agreement.

Libya

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister (1) whether she tried to discourage President Reagan from using British bases for attacking Libya before finally agreeing to his request; and if she will make a statement; (2) if she will publish in the Official Report a list of those consulted in the six days prior to the United States attack on Libya; when her consultations were concluded; and when her agreement to the attack was communicated to President Reagan.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to my statement in the House on 15 April and my speech in the debate on 16 April.

Fire Disasters

Mr. Madden asked the Prime Minister what criteria Her Majesty's Government use in deciding, in cases of fire disasters, whether (a) to make a direct contribution from central Government funds to the cost of restoration and repairs or (b) to leave the relevant local authority to bear the cost through increased borrowing; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Decisions about such matters are made in the light of the circumstances surrounding individual cases.

Shops Bill

Mr. Kaufman asked the Prime Minister, pursuant to her reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton of 24 April, Official Report, column 206, if she will specify the nature of the false premise upon which she indicated the right hon. Member's original question was based; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: My hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Dr. Mawhinney) was the duty Minister in Northern Ireland on the evening of 14 April.

Engagements

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 29 April.

Mr. Flannery asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 29 April.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 29 April.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Further Education

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many pupils remained in education after (a) 16 and (b) 17, but under 19 years, in each local education authority in England at the latest date for which figures are available; and what was the amount granted in discretionary awards by each local education authority in that year.

Mr. Chris Patten: Table 1 below shows the numbers of 16, 17 and 18-year-olds who remained in full-time education at maintained schools and further education establishments in the academic year 1984-85 in each local education authority in England. Table 2 gives each authority's maintenance expenditure on full value and lesser value discretionary awards in that year in England and Wales.

Female Students

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report the current distribution of female students by National Advisory Body programme areas.

Mr. George Walden: The full-time equivalent numbers in each National Advisory Body programme area of home and European Community female students on advanced courses in institutions which fall within the remit of NAB, and their proportion of the total, are given in the table.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report his estimate of the impact on the total numbers, and the percentage of women in public sector higher education, by programme area, of the differential cuts in programme areas.

Mr. Walden: No decisions have yet been taken on target student numbers in public sector higher education for 1987-88. Decisions on the resources available for the public sector will be taken in the autumn, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will decide on the disposition of academic provision and the allocation of the advanced further education pool in December following advice in that month from the National Advisory Body for Public Sector Higher Education.

No estimates are therefore available of the target number of students and the likely percentage of women, in 1987-88. In 1984, the latest year for which figures of actual enrolments are available, the total full-time equivalent number of home and EC students following courses of advanced further education at institutions falling within the remit of the NAB was 274,790, of whom 119,551 were women students. Since 1979 the growth in female enrolments has exceeded that for male enrolments by a substantial margin (41·9 per cent. compared with 26·2 per cent.), sufficient to raise the proportion of the total represented by women from 40·7 per cent. in 1979 to 43·5 per cent. in 1984.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Education Services

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the planned expenditure for prison education services for the financial year 1986-87; and what was the planned expenditure for those services for the financial years 1984-85 and 1985-86.

Mr. Mellor: At the beginning of each of the financial years shown, forecast expenditure on educational services was as follows:

1984-85	12,867,000
1985-86	13,581,960
1986-87	14,539,905

The figures do not include expenditure on religious education, physical education, industrial training, library, vocational training and construction industry training staff, building and maintenance costs and prison officer escort costs.

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the planned number of prison education teaching hours, both in total and for hourly paid teachers, for the financial year 1986-87; and what was the planned number of prison education teaching hours, both in total and for hourly paid teachers, for the financial years 1984-85 and 1985-86;

(2) what was the planned number of prison education teaching hours delivered, both in total and for hourly paid teachers, for the financial years 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86.

Mr. Mellor: The available information is as follows:

Financial Year	Planned Hours Hourly Paid Teachers	Total
1984-85	445,340	700,259
1985-86	479,934	730,077
1986-87	499,324	759,628

The number of teaching hours delivered annually is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

City of London Police (Black People)

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of the City of London police as to how many and what percentage of the City of London police force are black.

Mr. Giles Shaw: On 31 March 1986, one of the 774 members of the City of London police (0·13 per cent.) was a member of the ethnic minorities.

Police Establishments

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek from the appropriate chief constables and if he will publish the current police manning figures expressed in population per capita for the police divisions most approximate to the boundaries of the cities of Oxford, Exeter, Norwich, Carlisle and Peterborough.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the chief constables concerned that the population per police officer in these areas is as follows:

	Population per police officer
Oxford	1 : 399
Exeter	1 : 611
Norwich	1 : 585
Carlisle	1 : 583
Peterborough	1 : 596

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent request he has received from (a) the chief constable of Leicestershire police and (b) other police forces in the midlands for an increase in police establishment; and what were the reasons cited for their requests.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We have not received an application recently from the Leicestershire police authority for an increase in the authorised establishment of the force.

The following four police authorities in the midlands have applied for increases totalling 140 in their authorised establishments for the financial year 1985-86 or later, mainly for uniformed patrol duties, including the policing of motorways. Eighty-eight additional posts have so far been approved for three of these forces. A decision will be made later on the remaining application.

Police authority/ force	Increase applied for	Increase approved
Northamptonshire	29	29
Staffordshire	*52	—
Warwickshire	29	29
West Mercia	30	30

* Further consideration will be given later to this application.

Community Radio

Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Advisory Panel on Community Radio is yet ready to announce the successful Greek-speaking and Afro-Caribbean applications; and if he will consider what technical assistance will be made available by the British Broadcasting Corporation to those granted an experimental radio licence.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The advisory panel's report was received in February and my right hon. Friend will announce the successful applicants for experimental licences as soon as possible after completing his consideration of the panel's advice. Community radio stations will operate independently of the BBC and IBA; and it will be for the BBC to consider how to respond to any requests for technical advice or assistance that may be made to it.

Mr. Iorwerth Jones

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the physical condition of Iorwerth Jones; a constituent of the hon. Member for Carmarthen, at present in the hospital wing of Her Majesty's prison, Cardiff.

Mr. Mellor: No. My noble Friend will be writing to the hon. Member.

"Policing the Miners' Dispute"

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to obtain a copy of the Association of Police Officers' paper entitled "Policing the Miners' Dispute" with a view to placing it in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 21 April 1986, c. 19]: With the agreement of the Association of Chief Police Officers, I am today placing a copy of the paper in the Library.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

St. Alphege's, Southwark

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the hon. Member for Wokingham, as representing the Church Commissioners, what is the current position in relation to the redundant church of St. Alphege's, Southwark.

Sir William van Straubenzee: This church is not yet officially redundant. A draft pastoral scheme providing for it to be declared redundant and leased for storage and ancillary purposes was published last autumn and no objections were received. This procedure was always, however, subject to the London borough of Southwark granting planning permission. Such permission was recently refused, and the position is now being reconsidered by the diocesan authorities in the light of this refusal.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Cement

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what tonnage of cement has been imported into the United Kingdom for each of the last three years; from what source; and what this tonnage represents in estimated cash terms.

Mr. Howard: The information is as follows:

Quantity (thousand metric tonnes)/Value (£ million)

	1983		1984		1985*
	Quantity	Value	Quantity	Value	Quantity	Value

SCOTLAND

Fishing Industry

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of fishing vessels laid up, the number of new vessels introduced, the number actually fishing and the number of fishermen employed in the Scottish fishing industry for each of the years 1976 to 1985.

Mr. John MacKay: The available information is set out in the following table. Statistics are not collected for laying up. This varies widely in duration and may be voluntary or enforced by, for example, seasonal fisheries and quota exhaustion.

	1976	1977	1978	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985
Number of active fishing vessels at end of each year	2,616	2,580	2,616	2,517	2,514	2,370	2,233	2,214	2,180	2,198
Number of newly built vessels joining fleet (30 feet and over)	40	24	25	35	52	34	25	18	27	27
Number of regularly and partially employed fishermen	8,866	8,985	9,241	8,824	8,699	8,461	8,184	8,075	8,100	8,102

Notes:
1. The 1985 statistics are provisional.
2. Only one Scottish fishing vessel has been the subject of a laying-up grant under the Fishing Vessels (Financial Assistance) Scheme 1983.

Social Work Staff (Qualifications)

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of social work staff serving in local authority residential establishments, day care establishments, and in the field, respectively, have either a certificate of qualification in social work or a certificate in social service or both; and how these figures compare with five and 10 years earlier.

Mr. John MacKay: Figures for 1984, the latest year available, and for 1979 are given in the table. Information for 1974 is not available in the form requested.

Proportion of social work staff holding CQSW or CSS or both

	At October 1979 per cent.	1984 per cent.
In day care establishments	0·8	5·4
In residential establishments	1·1	3·8
In field work	75·5	84·1

Detailed information on the qualifications of all local authority social work staff is contained in the SWSG statistical bulletins "Staff of Scottish Social Work Departments" published each year from 1978 to 1984. Copies are in the Library.

Local Authority Services

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the range of services funded from local authority rates in (a) Scotland, (b) England and (c) Wales.

Mr. Rifkind: The services funded from local authority rates in Scotland which are relevant for rate support grant are set out in the "Report on the Rate Support Grant (Scotland) (No. 4) Order 1985". In addition, Scottish authorities provide housing services, which are not relevant for rate support grant. The services funded from local authority rates in England are set out in the "Rate Support Grant Report (England) 1986-87". The services funded from local authority rates in Wales are set out in the "Welsh Rate Support Grant Report 1986-87". Copies of all these reports are in the Library.

Rates

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a comparison of the level of non-domestic rates in (a) England, (b) Scotland and (c) Wales.

Mr. Rifkind: The estimated total amount of non-domestic rates collected in each country in 1985-86 was:

	£ million
Scotland	1,030
England	7,200
Wales	290

In view of the differences in the dates of the most recent revaluations it is not possible to make direct comparisons between non-domestic rates in the three countries.

Teachers (Pay)

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from local authorities concerning the payment to teachers of the wage settlement for the 1985-86 financial year; what calculation he has made of the likely extra cost of the settlement in money terms to each region above that provided for in the 4·25 per cent. guideline advice given by his Department to councils for budgets; and whether he will compensate regional councils for the extra expenditure incurred.

Mr. Ancram: The Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and a number of authorities have asked my right hon. and learned Friend to provide extra grant to help meet the costs of the teachers' pay settlement for 1985-86 and also to disregard authorities' extra expenditure on teachers' pay when calculating rate support grant penalties for that year. He told the convention when he met it on 18 April that he had made it clear to the convention's representatives before the authorities settled with the teachers' unions that they had to do so within the resources available to them and that no additional resources were available. He told them that it had been made clea to the local authority representatives that there would be no disregard. He therefore told the convention that he could not meet its requests.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Mr. Archer asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what changes he expects to bring forward in social legislation in Northern Ireland as a result of the Anglo-Irish agreement.

Mr. Tom King: Changes in social legislation are the sole responsibility of the United Kingdom Government. In considering any changes we take account of views, expressed by the Irish Government under article 5*(c)* of the Anglo-Irish agreement as well as those expressed by other interested parties. I have put in the Library the joint statement issued after each meeting of the intergovernmental conference, which notes matters, including social matters which were discussed there.

EMPLOYMENT

Business Licensing

Mr. Ashdown asked the Paymaster General if he intends to conduct an exercise to examine the impact of local governmental licensing arrangements upon business similar to that exercise currently being undertaken by the enterprise unit on central Government licensing.

Mr. Trippier: Yes. The enterprise and deregulation unit is discussing with the local authority associations how to take forward this second stage of the review. As with licensing requirements imposed by central Government, views will be sought from business interests on the impact of local requirements.

Factory Inspectorate

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Paymaster General if he is satisfied with current staffing levels of the Factory Inspectorate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Decisions on the number of inspectors employed by the Health and Safety Executive are a matter for the executive, subject to the limits set by the Government on its total salary expenditure and manpower. I understand that 26 new factory inspectors have recently taken up post or will do so shortly and there will be further recruitment to the inspectorate during 1986-87.

Workplace Accidents

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Paymaster General if he will list the numbers of recorded fatalities and injuries at work since 1970; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The available information is as follows: figures for 1985 are not yet available.

Reported occupational injuries to employees and self-employed persons at work in Great Britain, resulting in:

Year	Death	*Major injury	Over three day absence from work (thousands)

¶ 1981-1984 fatalities and major injuries to employees and self-employed as reported under NADOR.

Over three-day injuries to employees only.

Factory Inspectors

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Paymaster General if he is satisfied with the frequency of visits to industrial premises by factory inspectors; and if he wil make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Yes. The frequency of visits by factory inspectors is determined by the Health and Safety Executive in the light of its overall resources. The factory inspectorate's programme of visits is planned on the basis of a rating system. This takes into account the level of risk to employees and the public, management performance and the time elapsed since the last inspection. There is no fixed period between inspections.

YTS and Community Industry

Mr. John Fraser asked the Paymaster General how many people were in youth training schemes and community industry in Lambeth in March.

Mr. Lang: I regret the information is not available in the precise form requested. However, at the end of February, the latest date for which YTS statistics at local authority district level are available, there were 734 young people in training on YTS schemes and there were 84 young people participating in the community industry scheme in the borough of Lambeth.

Community Programme

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Paymaster General how many community programme places are presently filled in the area covered by the Hereford city council and the South Herefordshire district council; how many are available but vacant; and how many projects are presently in operation.

Mr. Lang: On 27 March, the latest date for which statistics are available, there were 208 community programme projects in operation in the Marches area, which includes Herefordshire. These projects had a total of 3,020 filled places.

It is not known how many places were "available but vacant". On 4 April jobcentres in the area held notifications of 436 community programme jobs, but these were not all immediately available; sponsors often notify jobs in advance of their becoming available.

Separate figures in respect of the areas covered by Hereford city council and the South Herefordshire district council are not available.

Maternity Pay

Ms. Richardson asked the Paymaster General how many women received maternity pay in the years ended March 1983, 1984 and 1985; and what was the balance held in the maternity pay fund in March 1985 or at the latest available date.

Mr. Trippier: The information is not available in the form requested. The numbers of maternity pay rebate payments made to employers by the Department of Employment are as follows:

	Number
1982-83	127,477
1983-84	131,433
1984-85	131,201

The balance in the maternity pay fund at 31 March was £27,922,000.

Jobclubs

Mr. Maples asked the Paymaster General what results are being achieved by the jobclub network; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The results achieved by jobclubs are very encouraging. Two thirds of people passing through jobclubs have found work. A recent Manpower Services Commission report shows that jobclubs are cost effective and compare very favourably with other ways jobcentres help long-term unemployed people. A copy is in the Library.

We have agree that the Manpower Services Commission should work to establish about 200 jobclubs by the end of the year, and 450 as soon as possible thereafter. This will mean a jobclub for each main jobcentre area.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Paymaster General whether he is satisfied with the accuracy of the returns submitted by Central regional council for calculating the level of unemployment in the Stirling constituency.

Mr. Lang [pursuant to his reply, 28 April 1986]: No. Unemployment rates for travel-to-work areas are based on figures from the census of employment. Figures given by the Central regional council for the 1981 census did not provide the appropriate address information for my officials to classify employees to the correct travel-to-work areas.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Stamp Duty

Mr. Freeman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the stamp duty proposals in his Budget.

Mr. Lawson: My proposals to halve the rate of stamp duty on shares as part of a self-financing package involving a broadening of the base of the duty has been generally welcomed. As foreshadowed by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary earlier today, I am making some modifications to the original proposals.

In my Budget statement I proposed an additional tax on the creation of certificates representing the deposit of shares, such as American depositary receipts. The certificates can be transferred from seller to buyer without payment of stamp duty, so creating a potential loss of revenue. In this respect ADRs are not unlike United Kingdom bearer shares. They are attractive to many overseas investors in British shares and, mainly for this reason, business in them has recently grown substantially. But United Kingdom institutions and other investors are also free to buy them, and sometimes do.

My objective is that depositary receipts—and similar arrangements — should be taxed at a rate which will broadly speaking eliminate the incentive to use them for tax avoidance. It follows that the tax on the creation of the certificate should so far as possible recompense for the loss of stamp duty on subsequent sales and purchases. From the point of view of the investor he will be getting a transferable "season ticket". He pays more now, but subsequent transfers are free of duty.

I have re-examined the rate of the tax against this criterion and, in the light of information that has become available to us since the Budget, I have concluded that the revenue should be sufficiently safeguarded if the tax on conversion of shares into ADRs and similar instruments were put at 1½ per cent. This is three times what the duty on registered shares will be after the big bang, the same multiple that has applied for some years to the issue of United Kingdom shares in bearer form. The tax on all bearer shares from the big bang will be fixed at the same level, 1½ per cent.

I am confident that the 1½ per cent. rate, which is only a half per cent. more than the rate which applied before the Budget, will ensure that there is no diminution in overseas interest in British shares. But if after the big bang it looks as if ADRs are being used as a means of avoiding stamp duty by United Kingdom residents, I shall have to reconsider the rate of tax on conversion. I shall expect the co-operation of the issuing banks and other market participants in monitoring developments after the big bang.

I have also received representations about the proposal that certain loan stocks should bear stamp duty at the rate of a half per cent.

In the light of these representations, I have decided to restore the exemption for most categories of loan stock. Registered convertibles will, however, continue to be taxed like equities, as they were before the Budget.

I have also decided to make a small modification to my proposal to impose a charge on transactions that take place within a stock exchange account. Purchase of shares by broker-dealers will exempt from the new charge provided the shares are resold within seven days.

The net effect of all these changes, and recent evidence of market activity, leave unchanged the estimated yield of stamp duty as forecast at the time of the Budget.

Fuller details are contained in an Inland Revenue press notice, published today.

Banking Act 1979

Mr. Freeman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to exercise any of his order-making powers under the Banking Act 1979.

Mr. Lawson: The Government have decided to remove the constraints which prevent companies from financing themselves by issuing sterling commercial paper.

The necessary amendment to the Banking Act 1979 (Exempt Transactions) Regulations is being laid today to exempt sterling commercial paper from the definition of deposit taking in the Banking Act. An order is also being laid today amending the Control of Borrowing Order 1958 to exempt sterling commercial paper from the controls contained in part 1 of that order. A copy of the Bank of England's market notice describing the arrangements for the issue of sterling commercial paper is being placed in the Library.

As a transitional measure the Government will introduce an amendment to the Financial Services Bill specifically providing for British companies, in respect of sterling commercial paper, the dispensation from publishing a full prospectus which section 79(2) of the Companies Act already bestows on oversea companies including oversea subsidiaries of British companies. The proposed amendment would take effect when the Financial Services Bill receives Royal Assent. Definitive disclosure provisions will be made subsequently by regulation under the Financial Services Act.

An order is also being laid today to amend schedule 8 to the Finance Act 1984 to reduce the minimum term for qualifying time deposits and qualifying certificates of deposit to be excluded from composite rate tax from 28 to seven days. This is to bring the relevant minimum maturity provisions into line with those for sterling commercial paper. After the Building Societies Bill takes effect, building societies will also be able to issue certificates of deposit with a minimum maturity of seven days.

Departmental Budgeting

Mr. Richard Shepherd asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the results of the multi-departmental review of budgeting in Government Departments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: Yes. I have today arranged for a copy of the report by the head of the Government accountancy service to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Wilson was asked to examine the way in which managers construct budgets, challenge the budgets put to them, and subsequently monitor actual performance against budget. The purpose was to help Departments to continue their development of budgeting as an effective means of expenditure planning and control and as a tool which management can use to improve the allocation of resources and the delivery of better value for money. This is a vital part of the Government's programme for better financial management in the Civil Service.

The review has confirmed that our financial management initiative was soundly based and is being carried forward. It found evidence of good results in many areas. Civil Service managers are now much more aware of their costs and responsibilities. Managers have responded by taking the initiative to make savings and improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the activities they manage.

There are still gaps in Department's systems and in managers' use of budgeting, but this was not unexpected. The Government knew in 1982 that it would take a long, sustained effort to help managers to run the Civil Service more effectively, and the review points the way forward to a further stage in this programme. It makes recommendations to improve four crucial aspects of budgeting: the responsibility of all managers for setting and reviewing budgets; the links between budgeting and the public expenditure survey in which the Government decide their overall spending plans; the use of output and performance indicators and regular evaluations to measure achievement against objectives; and the identification within senior management structures of clear-cut responsibilities for the control and use of resources.

These recommendations will be the basis for action in each department. Each will apply them to its particular circumstances as it rolls forward plans for better financial management and better value for the taxpayers' money.

Mortgage Interest Tax Relief

Sir Peter Hordern asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost-revenue of restricting mortgage interest tax relief to the basic rate with (a) the existing threshold, (b) the existing threshold double the present rate for married couples or (c) no threshold whatsoever.

Mr. Moore: Assuming no consequential changes in the distribution of mortgages by amount outstanding, estimates of the direct revenue yield in a full year at 1986-87 levels are as follows:

Direct revenue yield from restricting relief to the basic rate only

Amount of loan qualifying for relief	£ million
£30,000	320
£60,000 (for married couples)	200
No limit	160

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish a target for the growth rate of non-oil money gross domestic product for 1986 and 1987.

Mr. MacGregor: Figures for total money GDP are given in table 2.1 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report 1986. Although these figures are not targets, the aim will be to avoid substantial departures in either direction in the medium term.

Capital Transfer Tax

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a list of the changes made in capital transfer tax in each Finance Act since 1979, and indicate in each case the cost in terms of revenue foregone.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 28 April 1986, c. 326]: The yield of tax in respect of transfers of capital in 1985-86 is estimated to be £70 million lower than it would have been if the 1978-79 regime had been in force, with scales indexed (in line with price movements) to 1985-86 levels. The table analyses this cost of £70 million to show the effect of the main changes introduced since 1979. The figures are therefore at 1985-86 levels and take the level and value of transfers in that year as given. It is not possible to estimate to what extent changes to the tax system may have affected levels of transfers. Each change has been costed on the assumption that all the changes preceding it in the list have already been made.

DEFENCE

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the NATO defence planning committee on 28 April adopted the force goal on the modernisation of chemical weapons referred to in the United States Department of Defence Authorisation Act 1986.

Mr. Stanley: This force goal has not yet been considered by the NATO defence planning committee.

Armed United States Personnel

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Defence what authority is required by United States service personnel to carry weapons in the United Kingdom; what authority has been given to United States personnel to carry weapons on streets in central London; what representations he has received about this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement regarding the presence of armed United States Marines from the United States embassy on the streets of London on the morning of 24 April.

Mr. Stanley: I shall answer shortly.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Anti-ballistic Missile Treaty

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the United States Government regarding the anti-ballistic missile treaty; and what is Her Majesty's Government's position regarding the treaty.

Mr. Renton: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said in this House on 6 November at column 24 in the context of the US-Soviet Geneva summit, the United Kingdom wants to see the ABM treaty strengthened and reaffirmed. Issues raised by the ABM treaty are discussed as appropriate with the United States Government although the United Kingdom is not a party to this treaty.

Chemical Weapons

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made at the Conference on Disarmament in Geneva regarding a ban on chemical weapons.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham) on 24 April at column 223.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mrs. Chalker: The usual forecast was deposited in the House today. At present six formal and one informal meeting of the Council are scheduled for May 1986.

At the Internal Market Council on 6 May a report on progress since publication of the White Paper "Completing the Internal Market" is expected from the Commission. The Council is expected to consider progress on a number of proposed directives including those on construction equipment and narrow wheeled tractors. There will be discussion of a proposed directive on forklift trucks and of a draft directive on easing of frontier controls. This Council may also consider the progress in the Transport Council of the transport items in the action programme for implementing the internal market.

The Consumer Affairs Council on 6 May will hold a full discussion of the Commission's paper on a new impetus for consumer protection policy and a review of progress on the proposed consumer credit directive and on the proposed unit pricing directive.

At the Foreign Affairs Council on 12 and 13 May Ministers will consider Community strategy in the run-up to the launch of a new round of GATT multilateral trade negotiations in September. European Community/United States trade relations may be discussed. In considering Mediterranean policy the Council will discuss modifications to the Community's mandate for negotiations with Mediterranean third countries on the adaptation of their co-operation/association agreements to take account of enlargement. The Council will review progress towards a meeting of the European Community/Turkey Association Council in the autumn.

European Community Ministers of Education will meet informally in The Hague on 16 and 17 May to celebrate 10 years of co-operation in education within the Community and to discuss arrangements for co-operation in the future. During the meeting there will be a presentation on the European Community's activities in the field of education and vocational training.

The Economic and Finance Council is expected to meet on 26 May. The agenda has not yet been fixed.

The Agriculture Council is expected to meet on 26 and 27 May to discuss the Commission's socio-structural proposals, pesticide residues in cereals and foodstuffs, undesirable substances in feedingstuffs, residues in meat, the directive prohibiting the use of ethylene oxide and a Commission report on imitation dairy products.

The Health Council will meet on 29 May to discuss the Commission's proposals for an action programme against cancer; the co-ordination of medical research and toxic substances in human breast milk. The Ministers will also consider how the member states might co-operate to combat AIDS and alcohol-related problems. They may also consider papers on the Commission's proposals on toxicology, the monitoring of the aluminium content of water used in renal dialysis, the emergency health card and further training for general practitioners.

Twinning

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any information as to the overseas towns or countries overseas with which British towns are twinned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office works closely with the Joint Twinning Committee of Local Authority Associations of Great Britain and Northern Ireland. The secretariat of the committee maintains a record of United Kingdom twinnings. British towns are twinned with 1,250 overseas towns in 48 overseas countries.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Foreign and Commonwealth Office is represented on the Joint Twinning Committee of Local Authorities Associations of Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Eggar: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is represented with observer status on the Joint Twinning Committee.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what funds were made available to the Joint Twinning Committee of Local Authorities Associations of Great Britain and Northern Ireland by the British Council in each of the last five years.

Mr. Eggar: The British Council made the following funds available to the Joint Twinning Committee in each of the last five financial years: 1981-82 — £37,350; 1982-83 — £39,800; 1983-84 — £46,500; 1984-85 — £49,600; 1985-86—£52,680.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Trichinenla Spiralis

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is the total annual cost of testing pig carcases for the presence of trichinenla spiralis; and what is the average cost per carcase;

(2) in what circumstances pig carcases are tested for the presence of trichinenla spiralis; and by whom such tests are undertaken;

(3) what was the incidence of trichinenla spiralis in the last year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Animals (Religious Slaughter)

Mr. Hunter asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his policy towards the religious slaughter of animals, following the report of the Farm Animal Welfare Council.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Badger Control

Mr. Chapman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action his Department will take to implement the Dunnet report on badger control.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 28 April 1986, c. 314]: The Government have already modified their badger control operations in response to Professor Dunnet's report. Action against badgers is now being confined to that part of the breakdown farm where it is believed that tuberculosis was transmitted to cattle, or to the whole farm if it is not possible to be more precise. It may still be necessary to go on to neighbouring land to find setts so as to assist the identification of badger runs leading to the breakdown farm. A consequence of this change should be that fewer badgers will be killed.

We are considering the other detailed recommendations in Professor Dunnet's report and seeking the advice of the Consultative Panel on Badgers and Bovine Tuberculosis.

Animal Welfare

Dr. Glyn asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to implement paragraph 37 of the Brambell report on animal welfare of 1965; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 28 April 1986, c. 314]: Paragraph 37 of the Brambell report dealt with the freedom of movement of animals which are confined. Since that report the Agriculture (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1968 has made it an offence to cause unnecessary pain or unnecessary distress to farm livestock. The codes of recommendations made under that Act seek to protect the welfare of animals kept in intensive systems. Members of the state veterinary service visit farms to check on compliance with these codes. The independent Farm Animal Welfare Council, set up in 1979, also advises Ministers on such welfare matters.

THE ARTS

Disabled Persons

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts if he will make available to the Arts Council additional funds for the provision of facilities for people with disabilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I have no immediate plans for offering additional funding; but I am confident that the Arts Council will do all that it can within existing resources.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Claimant Statistics

15. Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the expenditure in single payments, both in total and per capita, to social security claimants in 1978-79 and 1984-85.

Mr. Major: Expenditure was £37 million in 1978-79 and £241 million in 1984-85. On a per capita basis this is equivalent to slightly over 20p per week to each claimant on benefit in 1978-79, and about £1 in 1984-85.

Health District General Managers

16. Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many health district general managers appointed in the current year have no previous National Health Service experience.

Mr. Hayhoe: All 191 district general manager appointments had been made by 31 December 1985. Of these, 41 were from outside the National Health Service.

Physically and Mentally Handicapped People (Supplementary Benefit)

17. Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many physically and mentally handicapped people living in residential and nursing homes are now receiving reduced supplementary benefit as a result of the board and lodging regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: In July 1985 it was estimated that less than 2,000 people in residential care and nursing homes were receiving transitional protection which was due to expire on 28 April 1986. Many of these people will have made alternative arrangements. Others will have been helped by last November's increases in the limits. The remainder may qualify for an extension of transitional protection under the Secretary of State's discretionary power to extend the period when exceptional hardship would otherwise result.

Housing Benefit

18. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has received on the new method of assessment of housing benefit.

Mr. Major: Over 2,000 submissions were made by individuals and organisations in response to the housing benefit proposals contained in our Green Paper "Reform of Social Security." Further comments have been received on our subsequent White Paper. Virtually every submission commented—favourably—on the proposed new method of assessing housing benefit on the same basis as income support.

Embryo Research

19. Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if Her Majesty's Government have any plans to introduce legislation controlling embryo research.

34. Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when his Department intends to introduce legislation on the Warnock report.

Mr. Hayhoe: I refer my hon. Friend and the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) on 25 March at columns 445-46.

Pension and Social Security Upratings

20. Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest estimate of the saving to Her Majesty's Government of the latest bringing forward of the annual pension and social security upratings.

Mr. Newton: Our proposed change from a November to an April date for the uprating of social security benefits as from 1987 is being effected via an interim uprating in July 1986. The cost of that uprating is estimated to be about £420 million in a full year. It will not be possible to determine what, if any, difference the change of uprating date makes to eventual expenditure on benefits until a comparison can be made between benefit levels at April 1987 and what they would have been if the uprating had continued to be in November.

Welfare Food Scheme

21. Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what savings he estimates will result, in its first year of operation, from the change in the operation of the welfare food scheme as announced in health notice (85) 36 of January 1986.

Mr. Whitney: Savings would occur if some mothers elect to exchange their welfare milk tokens for one 900g pack of dried baby milk instead of two 450g packs.

Free School Meals

22. Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received in support of the Government's proposals to restrict the availability of free school meals.

Mr. Major: Representations have not been generally in a form which can sensibly be used to provide a simple breakdown between those in support of or against the Government's proposals, but some endorsed the general principle of higher cash payments rather than payments in kind.

Yorkshire Regional Health Authority

23. Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he last met the chairman of the Yorkshire regional health authority; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Hayhoe: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services and I had a meeting with Bryan Askew on 23 January 1986. We discussed the Stanley Royd report and the need for the authorities concerned to take action and to report.

Personal Social Services

24. Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the consultation on the role of personal social services will take place.

Mr. Whitney: I have nothing to add to my reply to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 25 February at column 537.

Vacant Hospital Beds

25. Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied with existing arrangements whereby a vacant hospital bed in one district is made known to other health authorities.

Mr. Whitney: Yes. Health authorities are expected to make the most efficient and effective use of their beds. It would be for local agreement whether that should involve use by other health districts of vacant beds.

Foetal Scan Systems

26. Mr. Peter Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the operation of foetal scan systems within the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The Association for Improvements in Maternity Services has expressed concern about the safety of ultrasound in the routine screening of every pregnant woman. In June 1984 the Department asked the Medical Research Council to convene a meeting of experts to consider the risks and benefits of obstetric ultrasound. The Department is considering the council's report and the need for any further action.

It remains our view that the decision to recommend an ultrasound scan is one of clinical judgment and that the reasons for all procedures and tests should be explained to each expectant mother so she has the opportunity to decline if she wishes.

Mentally Ill Persons

27. Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make a statement on the current level of funding for the care in the community of the mentally ill.

Mr. Whitney: Such care is provided both by health authorities and by local authorities. The form of National Health Service costing returns does not allow us to make an accurate estimate of the proportion of the total current expenditure on mental illness services by health authorities (about £960 million in 1983/84) which is attributable to community care. For example, we are aware that psychiatrists and other staff are increasingly spending time in the community at locations such as health centres, but the relevant salary and associated costs cannot be identified separately, except for grades of staff working wholly in the community. However, we estimate that in 1983-84 expenditure on psychiatric out-patient care, day-patient care and care by community psychiatric nurses totalled some £150 million.

Details of total spending by the social services departments of local authorities on care of mentally ill people in the community are not available for similar reasons, but expenditure in 1984-85 on two of the main elements is estimated to have been some £18 million on day care and £21 million on residential care. These figures do not include the cost of time spent by approved social workers and other social workers on the care of mentally ill people, since this, too, is not separately identified; and the figure for expenditure on residential care does not include the cost of a large number of mildly or more seriously demented people cared for in local authorities' homes for the elderly, as distinct from their homes for mentally ill people. Separate figures are not available for other local authorities—for example, housing—costs; for social security expenditure; or for employment and training services and so on.

NHS Beds

28. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied with the present provision of hospital beds within the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The number of beds must be a matter for decision by each health authority as part of an overall judgment on the pattern of services which need to be provided. It will also be affected by clinical decisions by doctors about individual cases. Experience over the last decade has shown that it is possible to treat far more patients with fewer beds.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many National Health Service beds are available at the latest available date.

Mr. Whitney: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 11 November 1985 at columns 94-95. Figures for 1985 are not yet available.

Medical Treatment (Supplementary Benefit)

29. Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what arrangements are available to give financial assistance through supplementary benefit to a person needing a regular course of a particular medicine prescribed by a general practitioner which is no longer available under the National Health Service and where no medicine available under the limited list suits that person medically.

Mr. Newton: Supplementary benefit is not payable to meet any medical need and we have no plans for change. However, we have been assured that the drugs remaining available for prescription on the National Health Service meet all real clinical needs and that there is no medical reason for anyone to have to buy their medicine.

Residential Homes (Board and Lodgings Regulations)

30. Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the implications of the board and lodgings regulations for elderly and disabled inmates of residential homes.

Mr. Newton: The supplementary benefit limits for residential care and nursing homes are currently under review and an announcement will be made shortly. In respect of longer-term possibilities, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe) on 28 January at column 501.

Community Care Resources (Lincolnshire)

31. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from Lincolnshire county council on the subject of community care resources.

Mr. Whitney: We have received no such representations.

Hospital Beds (South-East Thames Region)

32. Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of hospital beds in the South-East Thames region are occupied by patients of pensionable age.

Mr. Whitney: I am sorry I cannot give my hon. Friend the information in precisely the form he seeks. Figures readily available centrally are for patients aged 65 and over. During 1984, the latest year for which information is available centrally, in-patients in this age group occupied, on average, an estimated 55 per cent. of all occupied beds in the South-East Thames regional health authority.

Conductive Education

33. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on his Department's consideration of possible central Government funding of research projects into conductive education.

Mr. Whitney: The Department has so far received two requests for funds to help support projects on conductive education. One was from Mr. Andrew Sutton for a project in Birmingham. It was decided after very careful consideration that it would be inappropriate for us to support this particular project. The other request was from the Spastics Society for a study of current provision and an evaluation of the implications of wider development of the system in this country. No decision has been taken on this application as yet but our officials and officials from the Department of Education and Science will be discussing the application with the Spastics Society in the near future. We will, of course, be happy to consider any other requests for funding of research projects in this field.

Unemployment Benefit

35. Mr. Clelland asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will reconsider the level of benefit paid to the long-term unemployed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Benefits for the unemployed are reconsidered at each uprating, and will rise in line with other benefits in July. There will be a further uprating of benefits in April 1987; and the family premium in the new income support scheme proposed for April 1988 is intended to give additional weekly help to unemployed and other families with children.

Residential Homes Act 1984

36. Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent representations he has received on the working of the Residential Homes Act 1984.

Mr. Whitney: Representations about the operation of the Act which came into operation on 1 January 1985 have ranged widely. Registration authorities have been criticised for being too demanding or not demanding enough and registration fees for being too high or too low. It is too early to make any judgment, but the two-year study which the Department's Social Services Inspectorate is carrying out on the operation of the new arrangements will enable us to take a more considered view.

Computerisation

37. Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on progress on computerisation within his Department.

Mr. Major: An outline of the Department's plans for computerising social security benefits work was published in September 1982 with the issue of "Social Security Operational Strategy — A framework for the future" (copies of the publication are held in the Library). We envisage the progressive installation over the coming years of a network of mainframe computers linked to visual display terminals in every local office. Existing mainframes will be replaced as they approach the end of their natural life cycle, or built on where it is sensible and economic to do so. New systems will be built for benefits where no computer support exists at the moment.

The computerisation strategy is comprised of a series of separate projects, some of which have already reached the implementation stage. For example, in local unemployment benefit offices the teletype terminals linking them to the ICL 2966 mainframe computers at the Reading and Livingston national unemployment benefit computer centres are being replaced. The new system provides for Honeywell visual display units to be installed which will be linked to the computer centres by British Telecom Packet Switchstream Service. Two hundred and sixty-eight terminals have been delivered, out of an eventual national total of 844. Seventy-nine offices are now converted, and approximately 10 offices a week will be added on a rolling programme which is scheduled for completion in October 1987.

In local social security offices assistance in the short term is being provided by the widescale introduction of microcomputers for some of the most difficult and laborious supplementary benefit tasks. British Telecom microcomputers have already been installed in the majority of the 450 offices scheduled, with the full agreement of the departmental trade union side. Completion and full running of the three separate micro applications in all offices is expected by the summer.

In the longer term the local office project (LOP) will link social security offices into a national network and provide mainframe computer support for the assessment and payment of supplementary benefit income support and incapacity benefits. Approval has been given for a prototype to be established at a development centre at Lytham in 1988. If successful, three new area computer centres will be constructed and national implementation of the project will begin in 1989.

Approval has also been given for the establishment of a departmental central index which will begin to provide indexing and tracing facilities for local office staff in 1988. Other projects, providing on-line access via visual display units for local office staff to existing mainframes dealing with child benefit, retirement pensions and contributions, are at the planning stage.

Students (Benefits)

38. Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received in respect of the proposals to restrict student eligibility to benefits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Since publication of the White Paper we have received approximately 1,050 written representations and inquiries on the proposals which were put to the Social Security Advisory Committee and the local authority associations on 7 January. We are currently considering the committee's report and the association's views.

NHS Accommodation

39. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the progress being made in the sale of National Health Service residential accommodation.

Mr. Hayhoe: The Department is considering the action plans submitted by regional health authorities, some of which are still not in final form.

Pensioners (Income Support)

40. Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many pensioners he expects to be in receipt of income support in the year 2000.

Mr. Newton: It is not possible to provide an accurate estimate but, given the expansion of personal and occupational pensions and the growing value of state pensions as more is paid out through the state earnings-related pension scheme to those retiring this century, it is expected that the proportion of pensioners entitled to income support in the year 2000 will be lower than now. This assumes the value of basic pension relative to the illustrative income support rates in the technical annex to Cmnd. 9691 is maintained.

Wrightington Hospital, Lancashire

41. Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent consultations and representations he has had in connection with the proposed closure of the children's ward at Wrightington hospital, Lancashire.

Mr. Whitney: Consultations are a matter for the West Lancashire health authority and North Western regional health authority. Four representations have been received recently, two from my hon. Friend, one from my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, North (Mr. Burt) and one from the Arthritis and Rheumatism Council (Preston branch).

Anaesthetics

42. Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what measures are taken to ensure that adequate supplies of anaesthetics are available to the National Health Service.

Mr. Whitney: Supplies of anaesthetics are obtained by the National Health Service through the normal trade distribution channels. It is customary for purchasers to ensure adequate supplies through their procurement arrangements with suppliers.

Medical Techniques

43. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the major new medical techniques introduced into the National Health Service since 1979; at what cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: Most new techniques in health care are developed gradually, often as extensions of the use of existing techniques to treat new conditions. A period of development—often substantial—and clinical trial and evaluation is likely to precede general introduction. While the introduction into the National Health Service of some major techniques, such as stereotactic radiosurgery, lithotripsy, nuclear magnetic resonance imaging and digital subtraction angiography, can clearly be attributed to the period since 1979, these are not representative of the overall scale of technological advance in medicine that has been occurring. The costs of specific techniques cannot be separately identified.

Registered Homes

44. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many nursing homes and old people's homes were registered and licensed under the Registered Homes Act 1984 in the first three months of 1986; and how that compares with the same period in 1985.

Mr. Whitney: Information collected centrally on nursing homes and registered residential homes for the elderly and disabled in England relates to the number operating on a particular day in each year and does not indicate the period when new homes were first registered. The latest information on this basis shows that there were 1,491 registered nursing homes at 31 December 1984 compared with 1,316 in 1983; and 6,308 registered residential homes for the elderly and disabled at 31 March 1985 compared with 5,222 in 1984.

Supplementary Benefit

45. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any proposals to introduce regulations governing payment of supplementary benefit to claimants in three-bedded residential homes.

Mr. Newton: Residential care homes with less than four residents are not required to be registered under the Registered Homes Act 1984. Supplementary benefit regulations already include provisions governing the payment of benefit to people in these homes. (Paragraphs 3(4) and 6 of schedule 1 to the Supplementary Benefit (Requirements and Resources) Miscellaneous Provisions (No. 2) Regulations 1985-SI 1985 No. 1835.)

Occupational Pensions

47. Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to publish regulations on disclosure of information on occupational pensions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: The consultative proposals for these regulations produced a very large and detailed response from a wide variety of organisations and individuals and we have tried to take full account of the many different views expressed in that response. In preparing the regulations, we have continued to consult regularly with representatives of the relevant professional bodies as well as representatives of and advisers to occupational pension schemes and we expect to be in a position to publish them very soon.

Drug Abuse

48. Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement outlining the steps which his Department is taking currently to combat drug abuse.

Mr. Whitney: We aim to reduce demand by continuing our campaign of information and education, whilst taking steps to encourage better services for those who suffer harm from misuse. We have taken a series of initiatives including a video package for schoolchildren and central funding to stimulate service provision. Our approach is described in detail in chapters 6 and 7 of "Tackling Drug Misuse: A Summary of the Government's Strategy", which the Home Office published last month.

Sheltered Workshops

46. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received on behalf of sheltered workshops about the effect of the proposed abolition of social security single payments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: At present, where someone is awarded a supplementary benefit single payment for household goods or furniture, and the item is known to be available at a reasonable price from a local sheltered workshop, staff are instructed to explain this to the claimant and to offer to arrange for its supply with the claimant's agreement and on his behalf. The White Paper "Reform of Social Security" proposes that such payments should be replaced by loans or grants from the new social fund from April 1988. We have received a number of representations from hon. Members about the possible effect of this proposal on the level of orders from sheltered workshops.

We value the contribution made by sheltered workshops, and indeed our proposals for changes this year to single payments for the first time cover, in regulations, items available from such workshops. As far as the social fund is concerned, we are giving sympathetic consideration to the possibility of continuing the present arrangements in the case of grants and loans for items available from sheltered workshops.

Psychiatric Patients (Community Care)

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from the Royal College of Psychiatrists concerning the treatment of patients discharged from hospitals in the community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: We have recently received a letter from the registrar of the Royal College of Psychiatrists urging consideration of some change in the law which would empower doctors to ensure that former detained patients who are discharged back to the community continue their treatment. Officials will be having further discussions with the Royal College and others about the recognised difficulties.

War Pensioners (Housing Benefit)

Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many local authorities go beyond the £4 disregard for war pensioners when applying for housing benefit; and if he will list them in the Official Report;

(2) how many local authorities act on the guidelines to implement the £4 disregard for war pensioners when applying for housing benefit; and if he will list them in the Official Report.

Mr. Major: All 489 authorities administering housing benefit are required by law to apply a £4 disregard to war disablement and war widows' pensions. (Regulation 16 of the Housing Benefits Regulations 1985).

Information on the number of authorities applying a discretionary disregard higher than the statutory amount is not held centrally.

Nuclear Installations (Cancer)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, further to the answer to the hon. Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor) of 15 April, Official Report, column 371, he will give the equivalent figures for Ynys Môn for each year from 1962.

Mr. Whitney: The readily available information is given in the table. It should be remembered that the numbers of deaths from myeloid leukaemia are small and the number in any particular area may fluctuate considerably from year to year. No great significance should therefore be attached to the rate for any particular area in just one year.

Ynys Môn (Anglesey) Number of deaths from Myeloid Leukaemia (ICD (7) 204.1, ICD* (8 and 9) 205), estimated population and crude death rate, persons 1962 to 1984*

South-East Thames Regional Health Authority

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many staff are employed within the South-East Thames regional health authority; and what proportions are (a) doctors, (b) nurses and midwives and (c) administrators.

Mr. Hayhoe: The provisional (whole-time equivalent) total of National Health Service staff directly employed within the South-East Thames regional health authority at 30 September 1985 was 63,260. Of this total, 5·2 per cent. were medical and dental staff (including locums but excluding hospital practitioners and part-time medical-dental officers); 48·7 per cent. were nursing and midwifery staff (including agency staff); and 14·1 per cent. were administrative and clerical staff.

Police Pension Schemes

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment he makes of the implications for police pension schemes of the contracting out provisions proposed in the Social Security Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The contracting-out provisions for salary-related occupational pension schemes will remain broadly the same as now, with some modifications and simplifications. We do not expect the new right for employees to opt for a personal pension to have a significant effect on existing occupational schemes, like the police scheme, which offer good benefits and protection to early leavers.

Cyclosporin

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the current annual average cost of treating an adult, following a transplant, with cyclosporin as the main immunosuppressive agent; what are the cost trends in the administration of the drug; if he has any plans to seek to reduce the cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: The average annual cost of treatment with cyclosporin of patients who have received an organ transplant will be dependent upon the individual clinical management of the patier s concerned. I regret that the detailed relevant information is not collected or recorded centrally. However, it is estimated that the current average annual cost of treatment per patient with cyclosporin in the first year post-transplant is approximately £2,000. It is not possible to be more precise as dosage used varies from transplant unit to unit and patient to patient. The current maintenance cost is in the range £1,600 per patient per annum.

The annual dosage has fallen by approximately 20 per cent. since the drug was launched in 1983 as better understanding of its use has been gained. The annual cost of the drug per patient has therefore fallen considerably and it is anticipated that costs will continue to decline in the future.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the cost of a standard unit or dose of cyclosporin in 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Cyclosporin was launched in the United Kingdom in 1983. Since then its list price has been as follows:

Type	Strength mg/ml	Quantity	Price £
1ml ampoule	50	10	16·24
5ml ampoule	50	10	77·15
Oral solution 50ml	100	1	105·00

Contract prices to hospitals will be somewhat less.

Convalescent Homes

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make a statement on the future of the Netley Castle convalescent home in the parish of Hound, near Southampton;

(2) if he will make a statement on the future of the Fred Woolley House convalescent home in Southampton.

Mr. Whitney: Management of these hospitals is the responsibility of the Southampton and South-West Hampshire health authority, which yesterday considered their future use. I understand the authority decided that there was a continuing role for the hospitals within the district.

Residential Homes

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from voluntary and charitable bodies as to the effect the introduction of limits on the amount of board and lodging supplementary benefit payments to people living in residential care has had on the voluntary sector's ability to provide residential care to elderly and disabled people.

Mr. Newton: There have always been limitations to the amount of supplementary benefit that can be paid to people in residential care homes. Prior to 29 April 1985 there were locally based limits; since that date the limits have been determined centrally and the rates apply nationwide.

We have received a copy of the National Council of Voluntary Organisations' report on the operation of the new structure of limits. Representations have also been received from individual voluntary organisations. The report and the representations are being considered in the context of the current review of limits together with information from a management consultant's study on homes' costs and charges and the Department's own monitoring of the new structure.

Snake Attacks

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people have died in the United Kingdom through attacks by snakes in each of the last 10 years for which records are available.

Mr. Whitney: Information for 1975 to 1984 (the latest available year) is shown in the table.

ENVIRONMENT

Merseyside Residuary Body

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been spent on consultants' fees by the Merseyside Residuary Body since its creation; and how many consultants were involved.

Mr. Tracey: These are matters for the Merseyside Residuary Body.

Merit Bonuses

Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the planning inspectorate is included in the Civil Service arrangements for performance-related merit bonuses.

Mr. Tracey: Yes.

European Year of the Environment

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for the Environment to what extent he proposes to support and celebrate the European Year of the Environment which commences in March 1987; whether he will be supporting selected projects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend has pledged his full support for the European Year of the Environment. This important and worthwhile venture has the aim of increasing public awareness of environmental questions throughout the Community. The United Kingdom will play a full and vigorous part.

My right hon. Friend announced on 6 March that he had appointed Sir Peter Harrop to chair the United Kingdom's National Committee and to sit on the Steering Committee in Brussels. It will be the responsibility of the National Committee to develop a strategy for the United Kingdom and we expect to announce the remaining membership very shortly.

My Department has already indentified a number of schemes to support and will keep in close touch with the National Committee.

Planning Applications

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many planning applications have been submitted to planning authorities in England in each year since 1975;

(2) how many planning applications in England have gone to appeal in each year since 1975, expressed also as a percentage of the total number of planning applications for each year.

Mr. Tracey: The information, so far as it is available, is set out in the following table:

Planning applications and appeals—England 1975-1985

	(a) Applications received*	(b) Appeals received	(c) (b) as percentage of (a)†

1984	427,000	16,192	3·8
1985	431,000	17,053	4·0

* Statistics for planning applications received were not collected before April 1979.

† Applications received in one year may not result in an appeal until the following year.

‡ Relates to the financial year 1979-80 (see also *).

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning applications have been granted at appeal on the stated grounds of consistency with circular 14/85, expressed also as a percentage of the total number of successful appeals, since the circular was published.

Mr. Tracey: This question could be answered only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning applications from the borough of Basingstoke and Deane have been granted at appeal on the stated grounds of consistency with circular 14/85, expressed also as a percentage of the total number of successful appeals in the borough, since the circular was published.

Mr. Tracey: Since circular 14/85 was published on 24 July 1985, 59 appeals have been decided following planning applications to Basingstoke and Deane borough council. The advice in circular 14/85 was cited in nine of the 32 cases in which the appeal was allowed (about 28 per cent.); and in a further eight cases in which the appeal was dismissed.

Non-departmental Bodies

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number and description of the non-departmental bodies to which he has appointed members in 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The total number of non-departmental bodies to which the Secretary of State has made appointments is in 1984, 32; in 1985, 48; and in 1986, 17.

The bodies are listed as follows:

London Residuary Body

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if any upper limit has been set on expenditure relating to the payment of expenses of members of the board of the London Residuary Body; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: The provision made in its budget to meet members' expenses claims is a matter for the London Residuary Body.

Snakes

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many poisonous snakes he estimates there are in the United Kingdom in public and private zoos; what controls there are on the manner in which they are kept; whether he is satisfied with such controls; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: My Department has no figures of the number of poisonous snakes kept in zoos. However, zoos keeping these species must be inspected and licensed by local authorities under the Zoo Licensing Act 1981. Local authorities may put conditions on licenses concerning the conduct of the zoo, including precautions to be taken against the escape of animals, and steps to be taken in the event of any escape or unauthorised release. I have no plans to change these controls.

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he will issue guidance to those who keep boa constrictors or other non-poisonous but potentially dangerous snakes as to safe methods for their custody; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many boa constrictors and how many other non-poisonous but potentially dangerous snakes he estimates are in captivity in the United Kingdom; and how many and what percentage are in public and in private zoos, respectively;

(3) if he will introduce legislation to require the licensing of those who keep boa constrictors or other non-poisonous but potentially dangerous snakes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: A review of controls on dangerous wild animals was carried out in 1984. The review concluded, on the basis of expert advice, that boa constrictors and other non-poisonous snakes need not be subject to control under the Dangerous Wild Animals Act 1976.

Advice for private individuals who keep these snakes is obtainable from several non-Government sources, including a leaflet published by the Pet Trade and Industry Association.

My Department has no figures of the number of these snakes kept in captivity.

Local Government Finance

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 30 local authorities with the

Notes:

1. Because of the abolition of the GLC and metropolitan counties, authorities in London and the metropolitan areas and Northumberland CC have taken on additional functions in 1986-87 and have therefore been excluded from the table.
2. Current expenditure figures for 1985-86 are based on returns used in the RSG second supplementary report.
3. Current expenditure figures for shire counties in 1986-87 are not strictly comparable with those for earlier years due to a change to the education pooling formula.
4. Local rates include parish precepts where applicable.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 30 local authorities with the largest percentage increase in their budgeted current expenditure in 1986-87 compared with 1981-82, showing also the change in their rate or precept in the same period.

TRANSPORT

Vehicle Registration Prefix

Mr. Allen Adams asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what representations he has received from the Scottish Motor Trade Association opposing the change in the prefix licensing date from 1 August to 1 October;

(2) if he will change the date of prefix licensing in Scotland from August to June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Scottish Motor Trade Association expressed its opposition to an October change at a meeting with my right hon. Friend on 24 April. My right hon. Friend made it clear that he would be prepared to consider an alternative if the weight of opinion in the motor industry as a whole changes, including United Kingdom manufacturers, and provided that this is acceptable to the police. Otherwise the change would go ahead as planned in October 1987.

Written-off Vehicles

Mr. Crowther asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will introduce legislation to require that when a vehicle is re-sold after having been the subject of a write-off decision by an insurance company, that fact is recorded on the registration documents.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I shall answer this question shortly.

TRANSPORT

Pelican Crossings

Mr. Campbell asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he will issue the new regulations covering pelican crossings.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This year.

Orange Badge Scheme

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report the names of all those local authorities who do not operate the orange badge scheme for disabled drivers and the reasons given by each of these authorities for refusing to do so.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The orange badge scheme of parking concessions does not operate in the City of London, the City of Westminster, the Royal Borough of Kensington and Chelsea and that part of the London borough of Camden to the south of and including Euston road. These areas are excluded from the national scheme because of their particular problems with traffic congestion and pressure on parking space.

Road Safety

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the consultative meetings he has held with road transport unions on the new EEC Regulations [3820/85 and 3821/85] on road safety; and what assurances he has been able to give them regarding the future health, safety and welfare of lorry drivers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: I discussed the Commission's proposals with officers of the TGWU on 4 June 1984. My officials had further discussions on 27 September 1984, 3 June 1985 and 21 June 1985. Both I and my officials made it clear in the discussions that road safety has been one of our main considerations in the negiotiation of the regulation. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State has arranged to meet officers of the TGWU on 30 April to discuss our proposals for implementing the regulations and for changes to the domestic driving code.

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether the proposed new EEC Regulations on road safety, due to be enacted on 29 September, have received the support of the European Parliament and the Social and Economic Committee of the Community and the backing of the road haulage unions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: In adopting the new regulations, which come into force on 29 September, the Council of Ministers took account of the views of the other institutions of the Community and of the European trade union organisations.

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has established that all member nations of the EEC will introduce the new regulations governing road safety on or before 29 September; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: Regulations 3820/85 and 3821/8 enter into force on 29 September. They will be directly applicable in all member states.

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from the Transport and General Workers Union asking for the suspension of the introduction of the new EEC regulations, relating to lorry drivers' hours and rest periods; what reply he has given to the union's representations concerning the effect of the regulations on the levels of mental and physical fatigue of drivers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: My Department has received a letter from the TGWU dated 13 March 1986 setting out the United Kingdom road transport unions' objections to the regulations. This will be discussed at the meeting on 30 April which my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for roads and traffic has arranged with officers of the TGWU to discuss our proposals for implementing the regulations.

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the implications of (a) the omission from the new EEC regulations on road safety of any provision for a full weekend's rest for lorry drivers and (b) the procedures proposed for enforcing the regulations, for the safety of road haulage drivers; and what assurances he has given to the road transport unions on these matters.

Mr. Ridley: The new regulation increases the standard weekly rest requirement from 40 to 45 hours, and imposes new obligations on operators to ensure that their drivers comply with its provisions.

"Door to Door"

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report the methods and organisations he has used in order to publicise the second edition of his Department's publication "Door to Door", the guide to transport for disabled people; if he is satisfied that this publication is sufficiently known to disabled people and their families or friends; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The second edition of "Door to Door", a guide to transport for disabled people, was published by the Department in February. One million copies of this free guide were printed. So far 755,000 copies have been distributed to voluntary groups, local authorities and other organisations and to individuals. Almost 800 copies on audio cassette for blind people have also been distributed.

The guide has been publicised widely through the magazines of voluntary organisations and through the national press. Posters and Freepost request cards have been circulated. Boots the Chemists are also distributing the guide.

A video film to publicise the guide and give information about transport for disabled people is available on free loan from the Department.

The guide is becoming known to disabled people and their families and friends.

Optica Aircraft (Crash Report)

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he will publish the report of the accidents investigation branch on the crash of the Optica aircraft on 15 May 1985.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The accidents investigation branch anticipates submitting the report on this accident to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in the next three weeks or so. The interested parties involved then have a three-week statutory period in which to ask for a review board. If no such request for review is made the report will go to Her Majesty's Stationery Office for printing. It is not possible at this moment to give a precise date for publication.

Written-off Vehicles (Resale)

Mr. Crowther asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will introduce legislation to require that when a vehicle is resold after having been the subject of a write-off decision by an insurance company, that fact is recorded on the registration documents.

Mr. Michael Spicer [pursuant to his reply, 28 April 1986]: I am aware of the problems associated with the resale of written-off vehicles and my Department is invesigating the options for improving the position with interested parties, expecially the police. Recording the fact that a vehicle has been written-off on the registration document would, however, create a number of problems. It would not, for instance, be possible to identify all potential safety risks by this method and many of the vehicles so identified would have been repaired to perfectly acceptable safety standards. The best safeguard for those buying used cars is to have them checked by independent experts.

Airlines (Change of Gauge Facilities)

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will give a list of the airlines allowed to use change of gauge facilities in the United Kingdom; if he will estimate the size of such activities; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information he has as to facilities available in the United States or any other countries for British airlines to operate change of gauge facilities; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what is his policy regarding change of gauge facilities for foreign airlines bringing passengers into the United Kingdom and then taking them on in their own aricraft to other destinations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Thirty-eight of our bilateral air services agreements contain a reciprocal change of gauge provision. In practice, these rights are little used nowadays by either British or foreign airlines. However, for United States airlines with more than one route to the United Kingdom these rights are valuable when used in conjunction with combination rights beyond the United Kingdom to other European cities. Pan Am, for example, uses both change of gauge and combination rights to operate a hub and spoke system at Heathrow. Although change of gauge rights are available for British airlines in the United States, these rights are not of comparable value. British airlines may operate only to a limited number of United States gateway cities where they inevitably compete with United States airlines operating non-stop services to the United Kingdom. There is therefore little opportunity or commercial benefit for a British airline to mount its own hubbing operations within the United States. This is one reason among others why the Government are negotiating with the United States Government for a better balance of rights and opportunities, the need for which has become apparent. The Government's policy in general towards change of gauge operations within the United Kingdom by foreign airlines is to grant such rights where British airlines can make comparable use of such reciprocal rights overseas or enjoy other compensatory competitive opportunities in return.

Vehicle Registration Prefix

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has had from motor traders, importers, manufacturers, retailers and car leasing companies on the proposals to change car prefix dates from August to October; and what proportion of those supports this move and what proportion opposes it.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders, its British manufacturer members, and large distributor members representing both British and importer franchises support the change to October. The other interests referred to by my hon. Friend generally oppose it.

Finart Oil Terminal

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Transport what controls are exercised over merchant vessels in excess of 100 gross registered tonnage proceeding to the Finart oil terminal on the Clyde; what breaches of these controls have occurred in the last five years; with what consequences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: Merchant vessels over 100 gross registered tonnes must take a pilot. Vessels must obey speed restrictions and the instructions of the Queen's harbour master during the passage through the royal dockyard port of Gareloch and Loch Long, and keep outside the protected area off the Royal Naval armament depot, Coulport. There have been no breaches of these requirements in the last five years. Within the area of jurisdiction of the Clyde port authority, vessels are subject to any byelaws or directions to shipping made by that authority, to which any questions about breaches should be addressed.

Helicopter Rescue Service, Stornoway

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the outcome of the United Kingdom search and rescue services committee's discussions on 29 April concerning the possibility of locating a helicopter rescue service at Stornoway, Isle of Lewis.

Mr. Ridley: Yes.

The United Kingdom SAR committee met on 29 April and considered the level of helicopter coverage off north-west Scotland.

Although the committee was of the opinion that there was no case for any immediate redeployment of existing

SAR helicopter cover, it was made aware of the continuing trend towards greater fishing activity north and west of the Hebrides which may be beyond the effective range of present resources. Furthermore, better lifeboat cover of the area was deemed impractical.

Therefore, the committee agreed to refer the matter to a working group to study all aspects of the problem. The group, which is to consist of representatives of the Government Departments concerned, civil agencies and the fishing industry, was invited to make recommendations as soon as possible.

ENVIRONMENT

Acid Pollution

Mr. Powley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the report of his Department's acid waters review group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The interim report by the United Kingdom Acid Waters Review Group is being published today. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library.

The group's report assesses the data currently available and sets out the scientific background to the various processes that may contribute to freshwater acidity. Criteria and definitions for identifying acidific waters are recommended and methods and guidelines for monitoring freshwaters are reviewed.

The report notes that acidification has been identified in some distinct geological regions of the north of England, south-west Scotland and Wales, but that there is no evidence of widespread acidification of United Kingdom freshwaters generally. It discusses the decline of salmon and trout fisheries in some parts of Scotland and Wales, and suggests that the importance of land use practices for fisheries may be indicated by the tendency for poor fishery status to correlate with afforested catchment areas, although a casual relationship between afforestation and fishery decline has not been established.

The report notes that available data on the chemical and biological status of freshwaters were mostly obtained for purposes other than the assessment of freshwater acidification, and are not generally of the quality required to produce the clear picture of historical trends which is needed to establish whether links exist between freshwater acidification and acid rain or other factors such as soil chemistry or land use practices. Of the 75 sets of acidity data examined only six appear to give firm evidence of increasing acidity.

I have decided that we need a better picture of freshwater acidification and am taking steps to extend monitoring work in order to improve our understanding. Work already in progress under my Department's research programme on the analysis of diatom remains in sediment cores will also be extended to surfact waters in other regions identified in the report as susceptible to acidification.

The group's final report, due in late 1987 or early 1988, will draw on the results of current research and monitoring and aim to assess both the probable causes of freshwater acidification and the possibilities for remedial measures.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what systematic monitoring for acid pollution is carried out in rivers in England.

Mrs. Rumbold: The water authorities routinely monitor the acidity of rivers as part of their general responsibility for water quality monitoring. Specific monitoring of acidity is carried out in certain areas of the United Kingdom which may be susceptible to surface water acidification. In England, continuous measurements of acidity are made on the Rivers Esk and Duddon as part of a joint project between my Department and the North West water authority. My Department is also funding the study being carried out by the river purification boards into the effects of acid deposition on Scottish catchments, and co-funding the study of catchment systems feeding the Llyn Brianne reservoir, which is being carried out jointly with the Welsh water authority, the Natural Environment Research Council and the University College of North Wales, Bangor.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if salmon and trout found dead on river banks are tested for signs of poisoning related to surface water acidification; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: No. There is strong circumstantial evidence that short-lived pulses of high acidity associated with snow melt or the on-set of rain following a dry period have caused occasional fish kills in rivers, but fish killed in these circumstances show no distinctive signs and there is no test to distinguish them from those which have died naturally. Fish living in chronically acidified waters—generally lakes—may show observable signs of gill-clogging or skeletal deformity, but these symptons may not be indicative of acidification damage only.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing Repairs (London)

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the London Residuary Body about the £76 million granted by the Greater London council to the accountancy firm Satman for housing repairs in the London boroughs.

Sir George Young: The question of the GLC's payments to Satman was raised at a meeting between my right hon. Friend and the chairman of the London Residuary Body on 24 April. We understand that the status of the payments will initially be the subject of counsel's opinion sought by the GLC's appointed director of Satman.

Planning Appeal (Decision)

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when his inspector's decision in respect of planning appeal number W/135/4/LB will be announced.

Mr. Tracey: The inspector's report of the inquiry has only recently been received and I cannot say at this stage when the decision will be announced. I can, however, assure my hon. Friend that the appeal will be dealt with as quickly as possible.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Corrie asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy for no action to be taken in respect of destruction or damage to proposed sites of special scientific interest unless formal notification of the proposals has been made to the owners of the land prior to the alleged destruction or damage.

Mrs. Rumbold: The constraints and penalties provided for by section 28 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 do not apply until a site is formally notified as a site of special scientific interest. However, the Secretary of State is empowered by section 29 of the Act to make orders in certain circumstances to protect nationally important sites which may be at risk, whether or not they have been formally notified as sites of special scientific interest. My right hon. Friend will continue to use these powers when appropriate.

Defective Housing

Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if Leicester city council has submitted a bid for additional funding for Boot houses, under the Housing Defects Act; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: No such bid has been received from Leicester city council.

Urban Housing Renewal Unit

Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if Leicester city council was eligible to submit a scheme for consideration under the urban housing renewal unit; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Yes. The council accepted a request from officials of my Department's urban housing renewal unit, who visited Leicester on 12 March to offer advice about some of the city's housing estates. I understand that in the light of that advice, and of continuing contact with the Department's regional office, Leicester city council hopes to submit a detailed scheme to the Department shortly.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if, in the energy efficiency requirements of the revised building regulations, universal trade-off will be allowed between (a) permanent and variable measures, and (b) measures used at the discretion of the householder and those not;

(2) in the re-examination of energy efficiency within the domestic building regulations, if it is Her Majesty's Government's intention to replace the V values method of assessment with some other form of assessment.

Sir George Young: The requirements are being reviewed. The objective is to introduce greater flexibility taking account of the relative benefits of different methods of energy conservation. No decisions have been taken yet: there will be consultation later this year.

Planning (Consultancy Studies)

Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultancy studies have been commissioned since 1980 by his Department in the field of planning.

Mr. Tracey: Consultants are selected by competitive tendering to carry out research projects on planning, including geological and minerals planning projects. Research projects are also carried out by the research councils, and by universities and polytechnics. Studies commissioned from private consultants since 1980 are:

1980
District Shopping Centre Study
Business Services in Manchester-Salford
The Use of Population Projections; Phase II

1981
Monitoring of Enterprise Zones
Feasibility Study for a National Garden Festival in Stoke-on-Trent
Limestone Workings in the West Midlands
Survey of Racial Minorities

Management Training Needs of Urban Programme Project Managers

Consultants are also engaged to provide advice on planning subjects, primarily for management purposes.

Merit Bonuses

Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many officials, by grade, in his Department have been granted merit bonuses; and what is the average payment involved.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The total number of performance and special bonuses awarded, by grade, for 1985 is as follows:

	Number
Department of the Environment (Central)
Grades 3 and 4	4
Grade 5	21
Grade 6	12
Grade 7	40
Property Services Agency
Grades 3 and 4	3
Grade 5	6
Grade 6	17
Grade 7	55

The value of these bonuses was as follows:

Annual Performance Bonuses
Grade 3	3,000
Grade 4	2,700
Grade 5	2,200
Grade 6	1,900
Grade 7	1,500
Special Bonuses	500

Management Objectives

Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the current management information system for Ministers management objectives for the different divisions of the planning inspectorate.

Mr. Tracey: The main objectives for the inspectorate in 1986-87 are to reduce substantially the number of section 36 appeals in the system and the median times for handling them; to process other planning and housing casework effectively in terms both of speed and quality; and to ensure that inspectors' decisions are soundly based.

Women's Aid Refuges

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate how many women's aid refuges will lose funding as a result of the abolition of the Greater London council and the metropolitan councils.

Sir George Young: Decisions on grants for individual voluntary projects affected by abolition are a matter for local authorities. The information requested is not available centrally.

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many women's aid refuges have lost funding as a result of the withdrawal of urban aid since 1980.

Sir George Young: The available information is limited to projects which reached the end of their approved funding period and were refused further funding following an application by the local authority. Some 22 women's aid refuges have fallen into this category since 1980. The Department's monitoring surveys indicate that most of these projects will either have been absorbed into local authority main programmes or found alternative sources of support.

Asbestos

Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to require all public and local authorities to identify, indelibly mark and register all asbestos in all property within their responsibility and to prepare a programme for the removal and safe disposal of asbestos from their housing and buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The Department of the Environment issued a technical guidance note on asbestos materials in buildings in August 1983. Copies were sent to all local authorities in England and Wales. The guidance is being revised and updated and will be re-issued later this year. It describes general procedures for the identification of asbestos materials. It recommends that undamaged asbestos which is not releasing dust be left in place; the location of asbestos materials be marked on records or plans for future reference; and precautions, which may include labelling, be taken to alert maintenance workers to the presence of asbestos. Asbestos materials which are damaged and releasing dust should be treated or removed, but programmes to remove all asbestos are unwarranted. Existing legislation relating to asbestos in buildings is substantial and the Government see no need to introduce further legislation.

Leicestershire County Council

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has made to the letter from the chief executive of Leicestershire county council to him dated 12 March regarding the level of capital allocations for other services in 1986-87; and whether he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Officials replied to the chief executive on 15 April. I have arranged for a copy of the reply to be sent to my hon. Friend. Other services block allocations to shire counties followed recommendations made by the Association of County Councils. It is not possible to increase allocations now because, in accordance with normal practice agreed with the local authority associations, available resources were allocated in full before the start of the year.

Land Register

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to make public the Land Register in England and Wales.

Sir George Young: The Land Register recording unused and underused land owned by public bodies for England is kept in my Department's headquarters. A copy of the register for the districts covered by each of my Department's regions is also kept at the relevant regional office. A further copy of the register for each district is kept at the principal office of the local authority concerned. The registers are available for inspection by the public free of charge, during normal office hours. The Land Register for Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Housing Statistics

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses have been sold to sitting tenants by local authorities in each of the last 10 years; what was the average receipt to the authorities for each house sold; what was the average cost of (a) building new houses and (b) rehabilitating old houses for local authorities in each year; and how many new houses and rehabilitated houses, respectively, he estimates local authorities could have built with the moneys available to them from the receipts of council house sales.

Sir George Young: I shall answer this question shortly.

Sellafield

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish details of the proposed new authorisation for radioactive liquid discharges from British Nuclear Fuels plant at Sellafield.

Mr. Waldegrave: The proposed new radioactive discharge authorisation for Sellafield has been published today for consultation. It will set tighter annual, quarterly and two-day limits on the overall amounts of radioactivity which may be discharged. It will also, for the first time, set specific limits on individual radionuclides that are of considerable radiological significance or that account for a large proportion of the discharge in activity terms.

Within the limits set, BNFL will continue to be required to use the best practicable means to limit the radioactive content of discharges in order to ensure that the effect on man and the environment is kept as low as reasonably achievable.

This authorisation is the latest stage in a continuing process of limiting radioactive discharges from Sellafield, which are now less than one-sixth of what they were in 1979. The authorisation will be reviewed in two or three years' time and again when BNFL's current investment programme on effluent treatment plant is completed in the early 1990s.

Subject to the views expressed during the consultation period, the authorisation will come into force on 1 July 1986.

Agricultural Buildings (Change of Use)

Mrs. Currie asked the Secretary of State for the Environment in what circumstances it is appropriate to give planning permission for a change of use of redundant agricultural buildings in green belts.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Government's policy on the development in green belts is set out in my Department's circular 14/84, annex A, which says:

"Inside a Green Belt, approval should not be given, except in very special circumstances, for the construction of new buildings or for the change of use of existing buildings for purposes other than agriculture, sport, cemeteries, institutions standing in extensive grounds, or other uses appropriate to a rural area."

Where planning permission is sought for new uses of redundant agricultural buildings, it is for the local planning authority to consider the application by reference to this policy and any other material considerations. But it would be appropriate to take into account, where material, the need to diversify the rural economy by encouraging new types of employment and enterprise. Redundant agricultural buildings can provide very suitable accommodation for small firms or tourist activities, or can be used for individual residences, without detriment to the green belt and to the benefit of the local community, especially where the buildings are of attractive appearance and can be expected with normal repair and maintenance to last for many years.

In deciding planning applications for new uses of redundant agricultural buildings in green belts, I would expect local authorities to have regard to these considerations, as I, and my inspectors, will do in deciding appeals.

Residuary Bodies

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for the Environment on what matters he is prepared to answer questions with regard to the functions of the residuary bodies.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Residuary bodies are non-departmental public bodies whose main line of accountability is to Parliament through the Secretary of State, and I will, of course, answer questions on all matters relevant to my ministerial responsibilities in relation to them. The main powers and controls which I exercise in relation to residuary bodies were listed, and amplified in part, in the answer given to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 21 April, at column 65-67. In accordance with the normal practice relating to non-departmental public bodies, questions on their day-to-day management should be referred to the residuary bodies themselves.

WALES

Bus Services

Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of (a) current Sunday services and (b) current services after 6pm on weekdays have been registered as bus routes in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This information is not held centrally. At present only commercial services have been registered as local authorities have not yet decided which additional services they wish to support through subsidy.

Verges and Hard Shoulders

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy in regard to fitting full-scale hard shoulders as distinct from hard verges on all-purpose roads in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: It is not our policy to provide full-scale hard shoulders on all-purpose roads in Wales. For all-purpose dual carriageways a 1 m hard strip is normally provided, while on all-purpose single carriageway roads the edge provision is normally a hard strip or a kerb and raised verge depending on the volume of traffic the road is expected to carry.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Citizens Band Radio

Mr. Ewing asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland if he will discuss with procurators fiscal prosecution policy in relation to the use of citizens band radios for the transmission of foul and abusive language; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: I have no plans to have such discussions. The use of citizens band radios for the transmission of offensive or obscene language would be a breach of the conditions of the licence and accordingly an offence under section 1 of the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949. It might also be a breach of the peace.

Criminal Justice Act 1981

41. Mr. Maxton asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland when he last met procurators fiscal in Scotland to discuss the effect of the detention powers in the Criminal Justice Act 1981 on evidence presented in Scottish courts.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: These powers are contained in the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1980. There have been no recent specific discussions on these provisions.

Procurator Fiscal's Office, Kilmarnock

42. Mr. Lambie asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland if he will visit the procurator fiscal's office in Kilmarnock.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: I meet the procurator fiscal at Kilmarnock from time to time and I hope to visit his office later this year.

Private Landlords

43. Mr. Millan asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland how many prosecutions of private landlords there have been over the last year for fraudulent practices related to the Rent Acts and housing benefit.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: Such statistics are not separately kept and could not be obtained except at disproportionate cost.

Vehicle Excise Duty

44. Mr. David Marshall asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland how many motorists in Scotland have been prosecuted over the last 12 months for evasion of excise duty.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: In 1984, the latest year for which statistics are available, proceedings were taken in respect of 10,277 offences under the Vehicles (Excise) Act 1971.

Udal Law (Salmon Fisheries)

45. Mr. Wallace asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland what representations he has received in the last six months regarding the application of udal law to prosecutions under existing and proposed salmon fisheries legislation.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: I have received no such representations.

Speeding Offences

46. Mr. Allen Adams asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland how many people were convicted in Scotland during the first three months of 1986 for exceeding the speed limit in a motor vehicle and in commercial vehicles.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: The statistics for 1986 do not distinguish the types of vehicles involved in speeding offences and are not yet available.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Norman Shaw North (Bomb Blast Curtains)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Lord Privy Seal why there are no bomb blast curtains in Room 418 of Norman Shaw North.

Mr. Biffen: This room should have bomb blast curtains fitted, and arrangements have been made for them to be rehung.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teacher Education Costs

Mr. Barnett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the net cost per teacher education student in (a) public sector institutions of higher education and (b) university departments of education; to what factors he attributes the differences between the two figures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: The average net recurrent cost of a teacher training student in university departments of education in Great Britain was £3,975 in 1983-84, the latest year for which full information is available. In the public sector most teacher training is now provided in multi-faculty institutions and it is not separately costed in the national statistics. The average cost of public sector higher education in England in 1983-84 was £2,880 per student, after weighting the unit costs for polytechnics, voluntary colleges and other maintained establishments by the incidence of teacher training students between these three types of institution. The difference between the universities and the public sector is mainly accounted for by the research costs of the former, and also by a difference in the cost of premises. There are insufficient data to put values on these differences.

School Leavers

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many young people in England at (a) the minimum school leaving age, (b) one year above and (c) two years above minimum school leaving age left school in 1985; and of these groups what is his best estimate of the number who (a) were eligible to leave at the end of the Easter term and (b) did leave at the end of the Easter term;

(2) how many young people in England took (a) general certificate of education O-levels, (b) certificate of secondary education examinations and (c) both sets of examinations in 1985; and of these groups what is his best estimate of the number who did not return to school in the September term.

Mr. Dunn: There were 736,200 school leavers during the academic year 1984-85. Of these, 504,300 were in their minimum school leaving age year, 84,800 pupils had stayed on at school for up to one year in the sixth form and 126,400 for up to two years of sixth form study.

It is estimated that 290,000, or 40 per cent., of pupils who attained minimum school leaving age in 1984-85 were eligible to leave school at Easter 1985 and 37,000 were reported as having left by that date. Pupils in sixth forms may leave school at any stage.

It is estimated that 490,300 school leavers in 1984-85 had attempted at least one GCE O-level examination, 580,600 had attempted a CSE examination and 398,900 had attempted at least one examination of each type. Comparable data for pupils who left school in their minimum school leaving age year were 276,900, 431,400 and 262,800 respectively.

School Places (Parental Appeals)

Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to the answer of the hon. Member for Darlington on 4 February, Official Report, column 113, how many parents appealed against their local authority's allocation of school places in each year since 1980.

Mr. Dunn: The appeal arrangements of the Education Act 1980 applied for the first time to school admissions for September 1982. From informal inquiries made of local education authorities at the time, I understand that in 1982, 1983 and 1985 there were about 9,000, 10,000 and 9,000 appeals respectively. No such inquiries were made in 1984.

Pharmacy (Undergraduates)

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what consultations he has had with the Unversity Grants Committee regarding the intake of undergraduates in schools of pharmacy, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: None. The University Grants Committee advises universities on target entry to schools of pharmacy on the basis of advice from the Health Department and others on the manpower needs of the profession.

Lithotripter Machines

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the availability of the Lithotripter renal stone displacing machines to patients in the north-west of England.

Mr. Whitney: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) on 22 November 1985 at column 335.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Company Returns (Welsh Language)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will take steps to ensure that there is no discrimination under company legislation against companies who submit their accounts to Companies House in the Welsh language.

Mr. Howard: Under the Companies Act, accounts submitted to the Registrar of Companies in any language other than English must be accompanied by a certified translation into English.

I am prepared to examine these requirements to see if any changes are desirable.

Exports (US Controls)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his policy on COCOM following the United States imposition on unilateral high technology export controls in the United Kingdom on 24 April.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Government's policy on COCOM is to continue working to ensure that the embargo arrangements cover technologies of genuine strategic significance and are effectively enforced.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has about how many companies in the United Kingdom have made their staff subject to the United States Export Administration Act in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The United States Export Administration Act has no status in United Kingdom law; and the number of companies in the United Kingdom seeking to comply with United States re-export controls in the United Kingdom is not known.

Retail Sector (Competition)

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will refer to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission the question of the impact of recent and proposed mergers and acquisitions on competition in the United Kingdom retail sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: It is the role of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to investigate specific merger proposals referred to it by my right hon. Friend for investigation. The commission has no locus to examine the question of the impact on competition of mergers and acquisitions in a sector of the economy, unless it considers the question to be relevant in the circumstances of a particular case under investigation.

Bankruptcy

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to improve the speed with which bankruptcy estates are finalised.

Mr. Howard: There are cases which, because of their complexities, do take some time to complete. But I have no reason to believe that in general bankruptcy administrations are unduly or unnecessarily protracted.

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is satisfied with the method of control of the execution of duties by bankruptcy trustees.

Mr. Howard: I am satisfied that the general control of trustees in bankruptcy is adequate. But it must remain primarily in the hands of creditors by whom they are appointed and the courts which have general jurisdiction.

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is satisfied with the level of trustee charges applied to bankruptcy cases.

Mr. Howard: I have no reason to believe that the level of fees charged by bankruptcy trustees is unreasonable. Where the Official Receiver acts as trustee, his charges are based on statutory fees orders. In the majority of cases where non-official trustees act, their renumeration is fixed by the creditors or their committee of inspection and is usually based on the fees order scales.

Chemical Industry (Exhibition)

Mr. Garrett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the United Kingdom chemical industry to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Arrangements have been made for such an exhibition in the Upper Waiting Hall to take place from Monday 19 May to Friday 23 May 1986.

Securities and Investments Board

Mr. Nelson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are his proposals for the status of the Securities and Investments Board; and what investigation and prosecution powers it will receive if it becomes a designated agency under the Financial Services Bill.

Mr. Howard: Government amendments to the Financial Services Bill are to be tabled today.

The amendments make it possible for the Secretary of State to transfer his prosecution powers to a designated agency. He will be able to transfer the prosecution powers in whole or in part, and to make the transfer subject to conditions or restrictions; and he will retain the option of bringing prosecutions himself.

The amendments will also make it possible for the Secretary of State to transfer to the agency his powers to investigate anyone carrying on investment business. This could cover unauthorised investment businesses as well as authorised businesses. The Secretary of State will continue to be able to conduct his own investigations.

The amendments also provide for the naming of the Securities and Investments Board in the Bill. This does not affect the status of the board as a private sector body. Provided that the Secretary of State is satisfied that the board meets the criteria specified in the Bill, it will become the only body to which the Secretary of State may transfer powers when the first transfer takes place. The Secretary of State will still have discretion as to the extent of the transfer; and he will subsequently be able to resume powers if the criteria are no longer met, and he could then transfer powers to any other body which met the criteria.

The Government believe that these proposals will strengthen the effectiveness of the new regime for regulating investment business whole preserving the flexibility of the private sector designated agency.

PRIME MINISTER

EC (Intergovernmental Agreement)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister who signed the 1984 European Economic Community intergovernmental agreement on Britain's behalf.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member on 20 March.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister whether, on the occasion of the conclusion of the 1985 intergovernmental agreement on 17-21 March 1985, the Foreign Affairs Council was meeting as an institution of the EEC treaty or as representatives of the member states, outside the provisions of the treaty.

The Prime Minister: The 1985 inter-governmental agreement took the form of an agreement between the member states. The agreement was reached on the occasion of a Council meeting but was not a decision of the Council. This is reflected in the wording of the agreement (Cmnd. 9548).

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid Programmes (Environmental Impact)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department takes to assess the environmental impact on recipient countries of its aid programmes.

Mr. Raison: All aid projects are examined for environmental implications before any expenditure is approved. Any identified environmental consequences are then taken into account in the detailed design and appraisal of the project and, if the project is approved, in its execution and monitoring.

St. Vincent

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he plans to offer further aid to the Government of St. Vincent.

Mr. Raison: During my visit this week to the Caribbean I informed the Government of St. Vincent that we are prepared to make available an interest-free loan of £5 million as part of the independence settlement, for expenditure over about five years on capital projects to be agreed between our two Governments.

Dominica

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he plans to offer further aid to Dominica.

Mr. Raison: During my visit this week to Dominica I informed the Government that we are prepared to make available a new interest-free loan of £5 million, for expenditure over about five years, on capital projects to be agreed between our two Governments.

St. Lucia

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he plans to offer further aid to the Government of St. Lucia.

Mr. Raison: I have informed the Government of St. Lucia that we are prepared to make available an interest-free loan of £5 million as part of the independence settlement, for expenditure over about five years, on capital projects to be agreed between our two Governments.

United Nations General Assembly

Dame Judith Hart asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has yet determined which Ministers will attend the special session on the critical economic situation in Africa of the General Assembly from 27 to 31 May; and for how long.

Mr. Raison: I shall let the right hon. Lady have a reply as soon as possible.

DEFENCE

Trident Submarine

Mr. Franks asked the Secretary of State for Defence when the first Trident submarine is to be ordered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: An order has today been placed with Vickers Shipbuilding and Engineering Ltd (VSEL) for the Royal Navy's first Trident submarine. She will be named HMS Vanguard. The value of the current contract on VSEL which also includes the completion of the first of class work for the SSBNs is some £650 million.

HMS Vanguard will be the fifth British nuclear submarine to be armed with strategic nuclear weapons. She will enter service in the mid-1990s when the phasing out of Polaris will begin, thus ensuring that the United Kingdom retains an effective and credible strategic deterrent well into the next century.

This is a major order for VSEL and the first since it was privatised. It is likely to provide employment for about 4,000 people at Barrow and at least 5,000 elsewhere in industry. This order follows closely the orders earlier this year for the Royal Navy's 19th nuclear powered fleet submarine HMS Triumph and the three conventional Upholder class submarines, HMS Unicorn, HMS Ursula and HMS Unseen.

Messrs Rolls-Royce and Associates have special responsibility for the design and manufacture of nuclear reactor plant equipment and General Dynamics, electric boat division, in the USA, is responsible for the design of the strategic weapon system spaces of the submarine.

Small Arms and Ammunition

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what steps he is taking to curtail the placement of small arms and ammunition contracts abroad;

(2) what are the sizes, numbers amd names of foreign manufacturers who have supplied small arms ammunition to the United Kingdom in 1986-87 to date.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall answer shortly.

EMPLOYMENT

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Lawler asked the Paymaster General if he will list those training groups and trade associations which have amended their apprenticeship scheme to incorporate YTS.

Mr. Trippier: Information is not available in the form requested. However, in many industries YTS is playing an increasingly important part in apprenticeship training. These include arrangements in agriculture, building, electrical contracting, engineering, heating and ventilating and road transport.

Asbestos

Mr. Litherland asked the Paymaster General if he will introduce legislation to require the Health and Safety Executive to bring prosecutions in respect of any unlicensed operations involving the removal of asbestos in which a danger to health is alleged to have been caused by unsafe working practices, unauthorised dumping or pollution of the atmosphere; if he will seek powers to increase the penalties for such breaches of health and safety regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: No. The Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 already provides a range of effective enforcement options for dealing appropriately with each offence. Prosecutions are normally taken in respect of unlicensed operations if adequate evidence is available. The level of penalties is kept under review.

Mr. Litherland asked the Paymaster General (1) if he will introduce legislation providing stricter controls for all work involving all types of asbestos products; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what controls have been introduced on the manufacture, sale and resale, and use in the United Kingdom of all asbestos products; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The Asbestos (Prohibitions) Regulations 1985 prohibit the manufacture, use and supply, including sale and resale of products containing crocidolite and amosite asbestos in the workplace. Similarly the sale and resale of such products not intended for use at work is prohibited by the Asbestos Products (Safety) Regulation 1985. Other types of asbestos are not prohibited but are subject to strict legislative controls including the tightest control limits in Europe.

I await proposals from the Health and Safety Commission on new regulations designed to place comprehensive controls on all work with asbestos. I hope regulations can be made in time to come into operation at the beginning of 1987.

Mr. Litherland asked the Paymaster General what controls have been placed on the import and export of asbestos materials of all kinds.

Mr. Trippier: The Asbestos (Prohibitions) Regulations 1985 prohibit the importation of raw and waste crocidolite and amosite asbestos. The wider prohibition on supply contained in these regulations and in the Asbestos Products (Safety) Regulations 1985 has the effect of prohibiting the import and export of products containing crocidolite and amosite.

The Asbestos Products (Safety) Regulations 1985 require that products containing other types of asbestos must carry warning labels.

Prison Officers

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Paymaster General what was the (a) average salary and (b) average overtime paid in each of the prison officer grades, in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The available information relates to all full time non-manual adult male employees covered by the national agreement for prison services. Estimates of the average gross weekly earnings reflecting rates of payment at April each year and overtime earnings are published in table 2 of part A of the "New Earnings Survey" reports for 1983, 1984 and 1985. Copies of these reports are available in the Library. Comparable information for 1981 and 1982 is not available.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Anti-terrorism

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied with the arrangements made by European Economic Community countries for the co-ordination of anti-terrorist activities.

Mr. Hurd: There is increasingly close co-operation between the 12 European Community countries on counter-terrorism. The Heads of Government of the Twelve have in recent times discussed terrorism at their meetings. The Foreign Affairs Ministers have, most recently at their meetings on 14 and 21 April, discussed the problem of terrorism generally and of state-sponsored terrorism in particular. They have adopted a robust and positively co-ordinated approach towards the combat of international terrorism. They have this year established a new working group on terrorism within the framework of European political co-operation.

The Trevi group established in 1976 draws together the Ministers who, within each country of the EC, are responsible for counter-terrorism. We met in The Hague on 24 April and decided, among other things, that Trevi Ministers should meet more frequently and should, where useful, extend counter-terrorist co-operation to countries outside the Twelve including the United States. We intend ot hold a ministerial meeting in London in December. We also approved arrangements for a meeting in May of chief police officers from European airports. They exchange information on and co-ordinate methods of dealing with high risk flights.

Within the framework of Trevi there is a series of working groups, and a well-established machinery for the exchange between the police and security services of the Twelve of information and intelligence about terrorism. Close links have been established between Trevi and the new political co-operation working group on terrorism. When the United Kingdom assumes the presidency of the EC in July 1986, the Government will ensure that all these arrangements are used to the full in the fight against terrorism.

Rape and Sexual Assault

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to tackle the problem of under-reporting of the crimes of rape and sexual assault.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Changes in police practice in recent years, as regards recording of reported offences of rape and interviewing of victims, have had some success in encouraging victims to come forward and in arranging sympathetic treatment for them. We are currently considering with the police the recommendations of the Women's National Commission in its report on violence against women to see what scope there may be for further action.

Domestic Violence

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he has recently issued to encourage police forces to review their training procedure relating to domestic violence.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We are considering with the police the issues, including training, raised by the recent report by the Women's National Commission on violence against women.

Mr. Gora Ebrahim

Mr. Dicks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in view of the recent admission of links between Pan-Africanist Congress terrorists and Libya, he will deport Mr. Gora Ebrahim, the London representative of the Pan-Africanist Congress, and close down the Congress office in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Waddington: I understand that Mr. Ebrahim is not the London representative of the Pan-Africanist Congress. There is no power to prevent foreign political organisations setting up offices here provided that their activities do not contravene our laws. There is, of course, power to deport individuals on the ground that their presence is not conducive to the public good.

SCOTLAND

New Business

5. Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of new businesses which have been started in the Inverclyde district and Renfrew district since 1983; and if he will make a statement on the implications for the economic development of the area.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Comprehensive estimates for new business start-ups in the two districts are not available, but between 1983 and 1985 over 15,000 new companies were registered in Scotland as a whole. The growth of small businesses is an essential part of the economic development of any local area and it is encouraging that the SDA Inverclyde initiative team and the Paisley and Renfrew enterprise trust although, still in their early days, have handled a large number of inquiries from existing small companies and potential new start-ups.

Lowland Airports Policy

14. Mr. Lambie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next intends to meet the chairman of the Scottish Development Agency to discuss lowland airports policy.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. and Learned Friend has no plans to meet the chairman of the Scottish Development Agency for this purpose.

Hospital Provision (Argyll and Clyde)

25. Mr. Buchan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet the chairman of the Argyll and Clyde health board to discuss hospital provision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Mackay: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to meet the board's chairman, but I met him on Monday 28 April to discuss various issues, including the opening later this year of the new Paisley district general hospital.

Company Liquidators

16. Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many firms went into liquidation in Scotland during 1985.

Mr. Allan Stewart: There were 537 company liquidations and 298 sequestrations in Scotland in 1985. The figure for sequestrations covers all individuals and partnerships.

COSLA (Local Government Services)

17. Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to meet the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities to discuss local government services.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. and learned Friend expects the question of local government services to be discussed on 20 June when he next has one of his regular meetings with the convention on local government finance.

Coatbridge (South Circular Road Site)

18. Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate the cost incurred by the Scottish Development Agency to date in relation to the south circular road site at Coatbridge.

Mr. Allan Stewart: There has been no change since 21 February 1986 when I answered a question at column 373, from the hon. Gentleman about the same site.

Urban Aid Programme

19. Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current level of Government support for the urban aid programme in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Resources for 1986-87 amount in total to £8·5 million (for capital expenditure) and £26 million (for current expenditure).

These resources help local authorities to tackle multiple deprivation in urban areas. Following our review of the urban programme in 1984, revised criteria and priorities were introduced in order to improve the targeting and effectiveness of the programme. I am satisfied that these revised arrangements are improving the programme's impact on urban deprivation, and have no plans for further changes at the moment.

Community Charge Register

20. Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated cost of compiling a register for community charge purposes in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: No precise estimate of the likely cost of compiling the proposed registers has been made. I am consulting the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and other interested parties on operational issues involved in the setting up and maintenance of the registers, including the question of the costs likely to be incurred.

Labour Statistics

21. Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the current level of unemployment in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: On 6 March 1986 the number of unemployed claimants in Scotland was 359,318—3,382 fewer than in the previous month, and the second fall this year. While this is encouraging, the seasonally adjusted figures rose by 3,300 and the problem of high unemployment remains a major concern. The key to improvements in employment prospects lies in better economic performance and greater flexibility in the labour market and these are high priorities for the Government —as demonstrated by our recent Budget measures.

29. Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he makes of the current ratio of the number of persons unemployed in Cumbernauld and Kilsyth to the number of vacancies.

Mr. Allan Stewart: No such ratio estimates are made by my right hon. and learned Friend because they would be misleading. Unemployment and vacancy statistics are compiled on different geographical bases and the latter statistics are incomplete because of the significant number of vacancies which employers fill without recourse to the vacancy service offered by jobcentres.

On 6 March 1986 the number of people unemployed in the Cumbernauld and Kilsyth constituency was 4,781. On 7 March 1986 the number of unfilled vacancies notified to the jobcentres at Cumbernauld and Kilsyth was 169.

Speech Therapists

22. Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he has taken on improving salary levels for speech therapists in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: The responsibility for negotiating salary levels for speech therapists employed throughout Great Britain in the National Health Service rests with the Whitley councils for the health services, and it would not be appropriate for me to intervene before salary negotiations, which are currently in hand for speech therapists, have reached a conclusion.

Springburn (Job Creation)

23. Mr. Martin asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what resources have been made available in Springburn for 1986-87 by the Scottish Development Agency in order to alleviate unemployment.

Mr. Allan Stewart: In 1986-87 Scottish Development Agency funding amounting to more than £1·3 million will be available in Springburn for a variety of projects which will help create or safeguard employment. In addition, discussions on an initiative for Springburn arising from the British Rail Engineering Ltd — SDA study are continuing.

Rating Reform

24. Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received on Scottish aspects of the Green Paper on rating reform.

Mr. Ancram: Over 180 representations have now been received from individuals and organisations. These include a number of formal and detailed responses to the proposals in the Green Paper. The level of response is gratifying bearing in mind that we are only half way through the consultation period, and I hope to receive many more comments on our proposals before the period ends on 31 July 1986.

25. Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations he has had with the Confederation of Scottish Local Authorities about his new proposals on rating; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: My hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for local government and the environment met representatives of the convention on 24 February. Further discussions at official level are now being held on the operational issues involved.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people he estimates will pay more under the proposed community charge than under the current rating system in the area of Dundee district council.

Mr. Ancram: In Great Britain as a whole 51 per cent. of households would be better off under the community charge on the assumptions set out in the Green Paper. I believe that the figures for Dundee will probably be about the same.

Private Landlords

26. Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce legislation to strengthen the law against the harassment of tenants by private landlords and the abuse by such landlords of the housing benefit system.

Mr. Rifkind: I am satisfied that the law against harassment of tenants is adequate. The Government's plans for reforming the housing benefit scheme, as set out in the White Paper on the "Reform of Social Security" (Cmnd. 9691), include strengthening the arrangements to prevent abuse.

Dundee (Employment)

27. Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the employment prospects for Dundee.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The outlook for employment in Dundee, as elsewhere, is dependent upon continued economic growth and on pay restraint. Dundee itself should continue to benefit from the Dundee project under which the Scottish Development Agency and local authorities are acting together to develop new industrial and business opportunities in the city, and to promote its business image. Dundee's development area status and the Tayside enterprise zone will further enhance employment prospects.

Vale of Leven General Hospital

28. Mr. Campbell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he is likely to approve plans for the provision of inpatient psychiatric and psychogeriatric services at the Vale of Leven general hospital.

Mr. John Mackay: The provision of services at the Vale of Leven is primarily a matter for the Argyll and Clyde health board to determine. The board has not approached me with plans for any developments which would require the department's approval.

House Sales (Sitting Tenants)

30. Mr. White asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of houses sold by the Scottish Special Housing Association to sitting tenants in the Glasgow district.

Mr. Ancram: The Scottish Special Housing Association has reported 565 sales to sitting tenants in the Glasgow district council area as at 31 March 1986.

Home Helps

31. Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of local authority home helps for each of the regional councils in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: The information requested will be published shortly in a further edition of the Social Work Services Group's Statistical Bulletin "Home Care Services, Day Care Establishments and Day Services". A copy of the bulletin will be placed in the Library. I am arranging for provisional figures for 1985 to be published in the Official Report.

The home help service accounts for some 16 per cent. of total expenditure on local authority social work services. Individual regional and islands councils determine their own pattern of service provision within the resources available to them. Numbers of home helps and clients helped in 1985 were both higher than in 1979. Home help and client numbers both increased in 1984 and again in 1985, when the total for clients was 19 per cent. above the figure for 1979.

Region	Number of home helps at 31 March 1985 (whole time equivalent)
Borders	101·1
Central	448·3
Dumfries and Galloway	303·0
Fife	586·0
Grampian	733·7
Highland	301·4
Lothian	1,477·4
Strathclyde	4,715·2
Tayside	553·7
Orkney	65·9
Shetland	48·4
Western Isles	167·7
Scotland total	9,501·8

Oil Prices (Employment Implications)

32. Mr. Douglas asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the impact on employment in Scotland of the decline in oil prices, with particular regard to fabrication yards.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Lower oil prices should, on balance, be of benefit to the non oil-related sector of industry in Scotland through lower input costs and associated improvements in competitiveness. If these price levels were to continue, this should provide increased employment security and possibly new jobs.

As far as the oil-related sector is concerned, cutbacks announced by some oil companies, if implemented, could have adverse implications for employment. The impact will vary and is expected to be less significant for sectors associated with production and maintenance. Prospects for the fabrication yards depend not so much on short-term oil prices as on expectations for the 1990s, but clearly employment levels at the yards will be affected if oil prices remain persistently low.

School Closures

33. Sir Russell Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will set out the criteria used by his Department for deciding whether to accept the recommendation by a regional education authority that a primary school be closed.

Mr. Allan Stewart: There are no set criteria and each case is considered on its merits. All relevant factors are, however, taken into account, including educational and financial aspects of closure, arrangements for religious instruction, community use of the school and, when submitted, local views.

Opencast Coal Sites

34. Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with the chairman of the National Coal Board about the rate at which planning permission for opencast coal sites in Scotland is being granted.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. and learned Friend has had no such discussions with the chairman of the board.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total area of land now owned by the Forestry Commission; and how this compares with the figure 12 months ago.

Mr. John MacKay: The Forestry Commission does not own any land. Ownership of such land in England, Scotland and Wales is vested in the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Secretary of State for Wales respectively, and it is formally placed at the disposal of the forestry commissioners to manage in accordance with their statutory duties.

On 31 March 1986 the commission managed a total of approximately 1,166,000 hectares of land. The comparable figure for 31 March 1985 was 1,181,000 hectares.

Lothian Health Board

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with the Lothian health board about expenditure in the current financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: None. The financial provision for health and community health services in Scotland for 1986-87 was discussed in general terms when I met health board chairmen collectively on 10 March.

Mobbing and Rioting (Law)

Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to change the existing law on mobbing and rioting in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: The law of mobbing and rioting in Scotland was recently reviewed by the Scottish Law Commission, which issued a consultative memorandum on the subject. The commission has now concluded that there is no need to issue a report on the subject, as the present common law is adequate, and difficulties identified (principally relating to guilt by association) can be alleviated by changes in the use, and manner of libelling, of charges of mobbing and rioting. My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has taken careful note of the commission's view. The commission remains ready to reconsider the matter at a later date if circumstances so require. I have therefore concluded that no statutory changes are at present necessary for Scotland.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Forestry

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the change in acreage in forestry during the past five years; what is the present level of support for private afforestation schemes; and if he will make a statement on the future prospects for forestry in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Boyson: The available information is as follows:

(a) The area planted with trees on land under the control of the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland was 53,943 hectares on 31 March 1981, and 56,618 hectares on 31 March 1985; in the five years to 31 March 1985, grants were paid on approximately 500 hectares of new private planting, and there are an estimated 13,000 hectares of privately owned forest at present.

(b) In 1984-85, £37,837 was paid out in grants for private afforestation schemes.

The prospects for forestry depend on the availability of suitable land and resources in both the public and the private sector.

Job Release Schemes

Mr. Maples asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether parity is being maintained between the job release schemes in Northern Ireland and Great Britain.

Dr. Boyson: Participants in the Northern Ireland full and part-time job release schemes will continue to receive allowances at the rates payable, in corresponding circumstances, under the parallel schemes in Great Britain. As from 7 April 1986 the new rates are:

Full-time scheme

For disabled men aged 60, 61, 62 and 63 (and for men who have joined the scheme at ages 62 and 63) who are married with a dependent wife whose net income from all sources does not exceed £13 a week: £74·00 a week, taxable; for all others: £60·65 a week, taxable. For women aged 59 and men aged 64 who are married with a dependent spouse whose net income from all sources does not exceed £13 a week; £65·50 a week, tax free; for all others: £51·95 a week, tax free.

Part-time scheme

For disabled men aged 60 and 61 and men aged 62 and 63 who are married with a dependent wife whose net income from all sources does not exceed £13 a week: £42·35 a week taxable; for all others: £35·15 a week, taxable; for women aged 59 and men aged 64 who are married with a dependent spouse whose net income from all sources does not exceed £13 a week; £37·00 a week, tax free; for all others; £30·10 a week, tax free.

The closure of the part-time job release scheme, recently announced for Great Britain, will also apply to Northern Ireland with effect from 30 May 1986. However, the new rates of allowance will apply from 7 April 1986 to those continuing on the part-time scheme.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Benefits

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to his answer of 22 April, Official Report, columns 138-9, on the per capita social security expenditure on benefits in England, Scotland and Wales, he will publish an analysis showing what part of the expenditure arises from (a) supplementary benefit, (b) family income supplement, (c) unemployment benefit, (d) invalidity benefit, (e) benefits associated with disablement, (f) housing benefit and (g) other categories of benefit.

Mr. Major: Information is not available in precisely the form requested. The available information is as follows:

Estimated per capita expenditure 1984-85

£'s

	England	Wales	Scotland
Supplementary benefit	116	133	124
Unemployment benefit	28	31	37
Sickness and invalidity benefits	38	81	82
Industrial disablement benefit	7	12	7
Housing benefit	76	71	83
Other benefits*	377	385	367

* Includes retirement pension, widows benefits, war pensions, child benefit and one parent benefit. Excludes other benefits representing about 5 per cent. of total benefit expenditure in Great Britain, for which breakdown is not available.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the total spending which has been devoted by his Department to heating assistance benefits in each year since 1978-79 and the number of people who have submitted claims or qualified for such benefits in each year during the same period.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 4 March 1986, c. 125]: The main help with heating costs is through the supplementary benefit scale rates which are intended to cover day-to-day living costs, including the cost of fuel. Information about the extra help with heating costs given through heating additions and single payments of supplementary benefit is as follows:

Supplementary Benefit Heating Additions

	Number qualifying (000s)	Estimated expenditure £ (millions)
1978-79	1,546	90
1979-80	1,637	108
1980-81	2,036	161
1981-82	2,349	264
1982-83	2,552	339
1983-84	2,585	396

Source: Annual statistical inquiry for years 1978-79 to 1983-84. Firm information for 1984-85 and 1985-86 is not yet available, but the provisional estimate for 1984-85 is about £400 million.

Since Payments for Fuel Bills

	Numbers qualifying (000s)	Estimated expenditure £ (000s)
1978	12	406
1979	19	686
1980	10	637
1981	6	363
1982	*230	3,306
1983	11	629

* Includes exceptionally severe weather payments.

Source: Annual statistical inquiry for December of the relevant year.

Notes:

1. Because these figures relate to single payments made during the 12 months preceding the date of each inquiry to people still in receipt of supplementary benefit at the time of that inquiry, they are underestimates of the total number and value of single payments made during the year. Figures are not yet available for 1984 and 1985.

2. Separate statistics collected from local offices show that approximately 278,000 payments were made in respect of extra fuel used during a period of exceptionally severe weather in 1982, at a cost of £3·6 million. In 1985, approximately 170,000 such payments were made at a cost of £1·7 million.

Lithotripter Machine

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the installation of the lithotripter renal stone displacing machine in British hospitals.

Mr. Whitney: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) on 22 November 1985 at column 335.

Hospital Eye Service

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is his policy regarding financial consequences to patients arising from the proposed changes in the hospital eye service supply of spectacles; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if all those now able to get free spectacles through the hospital eye service will continue to do so after 1 July; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: At present hospital eye service (HES) patients who choose to have National Health Service glasses pay the statutory charges. These charges are intended broadly to reflect the full economic cost to the NHS of supplying spectacles. There are arrangements for the exemption from, or remission of, charges for children, people in receipt of certain social security benefits and those on low income. From 1 July, it is proposed that spectacles for HES patients will either be dispensed within the HES at hospital premises subject to NHS charges or obtained on the private market. Vouchers will be available to those at present benefiting from the exemption or remission arrangement intended to provide them with basic pairs of spectacles to meet their clinical needs.

Interested bodies have been consulted about the proposals, and consideration is now being given to the comments received.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many spectacles prescriptions for (a) children, (b) students up to the age of 19 years, and (c) adults over pension age were issued through the hospital eye service in the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many prescriptions for spectacles were issued through the hospital eye service in the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that I cannot give the hon. Member all the information he seeks. Information on the age groups of patients for whom spectacles are prescribed through the hospital eye service is not collected centrally. In 1984, the latest year for which figures are available, the estimated number of complete pairs of spectacles prescribed through the National Health Service hospital eye service was 264,258.

Tumour Markers

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what assessment he makes of the efficacy of tumour markers in the diagnosis of malignant disease and in monitoring cancer treatment; if his Department gives advice to health authorities on the use of tumour markers and laboratory tests for cancer; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many regional health authorities and district health authorities use the facilities of laboratory diagnostic tests incorporating tumour markers; if he will give the number of tests performed in each region for the last three years where data is available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Of the many tumours markers investigated, I am advised that only a small number has been shown to be of value in the diagnosis of malignant disease or in monitoring treatment. The Department gives no advice to health authorities on the use of tumour markers and laboratory tests for cancer. These are matters of clinical judgment.

Information on the use of tumour markers is not collected centrally.

Cancer Screening

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish assessments of public pilot schemes which have been set up to test the usefulness of diagnostic cancer screening tests other than cervical cytology and mammography involving general practitioners and clinics; and if he will make a statement:

(2) what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards regular screening of the population for the early detection of cancer; what plans he has to develop services in this respect; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Assessments of publicly funded pilot schemes set up to test the effectiveness of cancer screening tests are published in medical journals. There is at present no evidence to support the introduction of screening programmes for the early detection of cancers other than cancer of the cervix, for which there is already an extensive screening programme, and possibly cancer of the breast, which is at present under consideration by an expert working group.

I am advised that screening for lung and prostate cancer has been shown not be effective. Colo-rectal cancer screening is the subject of a 10-year research programme at Nottingham that subject started last July. The Health Education Council has given advice to the public on the signs to look for in the case of cancer of the testes and malignant melanoma.

Hospital Pharmacists

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment he makes of the implications for the quality of National Health Service provision of losses of hospital pharmacists in the area of the Salford health authority; what advice he is offering to the Salford health authority to help it maintain the requisite number of pharmacists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Local recruitment is a matter for district health authorities. The hon. Member may therefore care to address his inquiry to the chairman of Salford health authority.

Graduate Pharmacists

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the current supply of graduate pharmacists; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the impact of hospital pharmacists' remuneration on the supply of pharmacists to hospitals; if there have been any net losses to hospitals of pharmacists citing pay levels as the reason; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: There is no evidence of a failure of supply in National Health Service community pharmacy. An assessment of future demand will be made in the light of discussions on the report of the Nuffield Foundation's inquiry into pharmacy and on the discussion document on primary health care published on 21 April.

I am aware that there have been difficulties in recruiting basic grade hospital pharmacists. I understand that the management side of the pharmaceutical Whitley council has made a substantial pay offer to the staff side, designed, in part, to ameliorate this problem.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he plans to make any changes in his policy regarding hospital pharmacists in the light of the Nuffield Foundation pharmacy inquiry report, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: The report has been received and the implications of the detailed recommendations it contains are being considered. I understand that the pharmaceutical Whitley council is currently negotiating on certain of the pay and career structure matters mentioned in the report.

Social Services (Leicestershire)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what response he has made to the letter from the chief executive of Leicestershire county council to him dated 12 March regarding the level of capital allocation for social services for 1986-87; and upon what criteria he approved a reduction of 34·5 per cent. compared with the 1985-86 allocation.

Mr. Whitney: I replied to the chief executive's letter on 28 April, and will send a copy of my reply to my hon. Friend. The criteria used in determining the distribution of social services block capital allocations for 1986-87 were:

(i) all allocations were at least 50 per cent. of the 1985-86 level;

(ii) bids in respect of local authority contributions to schemes jointly financed with health authorities, schemes involving DHSS grant-aided secure accommodation, and regional schemes (where one contracting authority made a bid to cover a scheme which will also be used by other authorities) were provided in full;

(iii) the remaining amount available for allocation was then allocated on a formula basis, including a per capita amount weighted for the numbers of very elderly people, and a proportion related to the bid submitted.

Health Authorities (Vacancies)

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the number of unfilled notified vacancies for each health authority in England for the latest date for which figures are available; and if he will give comparative figures for 1979 and 1983.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that the information requested is not available centrally.

NHS Beds

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the ratio of National Health Service beds to population by region for the latest month for which figures are available; and what were the comparative figures for 1979 and 1983.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the number of hospital closures in each region on an annual basis since 1979.

Mr. Hayhoe: For the latest information available, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 3 March at column 62.

North-West RHA (Staff)

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many staff are currently employed by the North-West regional health authority; and what percentages are (a) doctors, (b) nurses and midwives and (c) administrative staff.

Mr. Hayhoe: The provisional total of National Health Service staff directly employed within the North-Western regional health authority at 30 September 1985 was 74,500 whole-time equivalents. Of this total 5·1 per cent. were medical and dental staff (including locums but excluding hospital practitioners and part-time medical/dental officers), 50·5 per cent. were nursing and midwifery staff (including agency staff), and 12·6 per cent. were administrative and clerical staff.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list by regions the current waiting list for treatment of all kinds for the latest month for which figures are available and the comparative figures for 1979 and 1983.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

NHS (Housing Stock)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average length of tenancy of families accommodated in National Health Service housing stock covered by his Department's Circular HC(85)19.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that this information is not held centrally.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many families, by health authority, are currently accommodated in housing stock covered by his Department's circular HC(85)19.

Mr. Hayhoe: The Department does not hold information about the number of families in health authority accommodation. When all authorities' action plans are in final form a summary will be provided which will contain information about the number of staff accommodated.

Desiccated Liver Powder

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to ensure that desiccated liver powder, imported as a pharmaceutical product, is accompanied by the appropriate product licence.

Mr. Hayhoe: The import of desiccated liver powder for use as an ingredient in manufacture of human medicines does not require a licence under the Medicines Act 1968. A product licence must be held for the import of a medicinal product already in its dosage form but it would be impracticable to require that that licence should accompany every batch of the product imported.

Single Payments

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the number and average amount of single payments made in the latest period for which figures are available to families with children, distinguishing between couples and single parents, in total and by type of single payment.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 16 January 1986, c. 703]: The information is as follows:

Type of payment	Awards to couples with children Thousand*	Average award £	Awards to single parents Thousand*	Average award £	Awards to families with children Thousand*	Average award £
Clothing/Footwear	34	50	28	49	63	49
Bedding	106	62	116	63	221	63
Furniture	207	84	246	89	454	87
House repair/decoration	29	37	27	34	56	35
Maternity	75	58	53	59	128	59
Furniture repair	19	38	24	34	43	36
Removal expenses	8	56	13	60	20	58
Fuel meters	4	20	5	20	9	20
Starting work costs	4	22	†	—	4	22
ALL PAYMENTS	502	66	525	71	1,027	68

The information in the table relates to single payments made in the 12 months preceding the date of the annual statistical inquiry in December 1983 to those in receipt of benefit at the time of the inquiry. It does not, as a result, record all the single payments during the year. As the figures are derived from an analysis of a sample of case papers, they are accordingly subject to the normal sampling error.

Notes:

* Number of payments rounded to nearest thousand.

† Less than 1,000.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Desiccated Liver Powder

Mr. Gould asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will take steps to require that desiccated liver powder, imported as a food product, is accompanied by the appropriate health mark;

(2) if, in the light of the recent seizure of desiccated liver powder by the London borough of Barking and Dagenham, Her Majesty's Government will seek to amend the regulatory framework for foodstuffs and pharmaceuticals so as to ensure that the future import of such a product is accompanied by appropriate documentation; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: Under current legislation meat powder imported for sale for human consumption as a food product must be health marked. We are considering whether pharmaceutical products containing meat should cease to be exempt from the health marking requirement.

Agriculture Production (Expenditure)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each common agricultural policy product the amount spent in 1985-86 on each hectare or livestock unit in the United Kingdom under (i) the European Economic Community budget and (ii) the United Kingdom budget in direct subventions, export rebates and so on.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested is contained in the table for those categories of expenditure which can be allocated to specific commodities.

Average expenditure in United Kingdom—provisional 1985

	FEOGA funded £ per hectare	United Kingdom funded () £ per hectare*
Cereals	48	130
Fodder	11	n/a
Peas and beans	154	n/a
Oilseeds	231	n/a

Hops	178	n/a
	£ per livestock unit (†)
Milk and milk products	87	29
Beef and veal	36	41
Sheepmeat	109	n/a

n/a = expenditure not separately identified.
* United Kingdom Exchequer expenditure less receipts from sales of intervention stocks.
(†) Dairy cow or heifer equivalents.

Animals (Religious Slaughter)

Mr. Hunter asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his policy towards the religious slaughter of animals, following the report of the Farm Animal Welfare Council.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 29 April 1986, c. 377]: We are considering the council's recommendations in the light of the many comments that we have received on them.

Trichinenla Spiralis

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the incidence of trichinella spiralis in the last year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 29 April 1986, c. 377]: There were no recorded cases of Trichinella Spiralis in 1985-86.

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in what circumstances pig carcases are tested for the presence of trichinella spiralis; and by whom such tests are undertaken.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 29 April 1986, c. 377]: It is a requirement of the legislation of the Federal Republic of Germany that all imports of pigmeat must have been tested and found free of trichinella spiralis. The Government decided to relieve exporters of the cost of testing carcases to satisfy this requirement as from 1 June 1983 as part of the arrangement for meeting the costs of veterinary supervision and certification in export plants. The tests are carried out under the supervision of a local veterinary inspector appointed by my Department.

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total annual cost of testing pig carcases for the presence of trichinella spiralis; and what is the average cost per carcase.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 29 April 1986, c. 377]: Expenditure on such tests during the financial year 1985-86 is estimated at £235,000. The average cost per carcase was 57p.

"Diet, Nutrition and Health"

Mr. Coombs asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he plans any changes in policy in the light of the report "Diet, Nutrition and Health" produced by the board of science and education of the British Medical Association; a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 28 April 1986, c. 315]: We have already published proposals for the fat content labelling of foods in response to the recommendation in the COMA "Report on Diet and Cardiovascular Disease" and we have at the same time published draft guidelines on the nutrition and labelling of food. We have already stated that we will take the recommendations of the COMA report into account when discussing the common agricultural policy within the European Community.

Sherry

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under which part of article 43 of the treaty establishing the EEC a decision will be made in 1995 on the arrangements for use of the terms British sherry, Irish sherry and Cyprus sherry.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 28 April 1986, c. 314]: Under article 43(2).

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why it was necessary to include provisions relating to the sale of British sherry for 10 years in the Treaty of Accession of Spain and Portugal to the EEC: for what reasons Her Majesty's Government agreed to the provisions of article 129 in relation to British sherry; and what discussions he had prior to the negotiations with the British sherry industry.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 28 April 1986, c. 314]: The provision of "British Sherry" included in article 129 of the Treaty of Accession were necessary to provide for the continued use of this description. My Department had frequent contact with the British sherry industry during the accession negotiations.

Apple Replanting Grant

Sir John Wells asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing the percentage uptake of the apple replanting grant each year since its inception; and what sums were under consideration or otherwise at the latest convenient date.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 28 April 1986, c. 314]: The number of claims expressed as a percentage of the growers registered with the Apple and Pear Development Council is as follows:

1 April—31 December 1983	1984	1985
1·2	7·4	11·0

Information on current levels of investment will not be available until grant claims are received.

Lancashire and Western Sea Fisheries

Mr. Onslow asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to ensure the protection of sea fisheries in the area covered by the Lancashire and Western Sea Fisheries Committee, following that body's decision to lay off its sea fishery officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 25 April 1986, c. 248]: My Department is responsible for national policies in the area covered by the Lancashire and Western Sea Fisheries Joint Committee. Their implementation is not affected by the action that the committee is taking in response to the recent decisions of all but two of the district councils in Merseyside and Greater Manchester not to join the committee following the abolition of the Merseyside and Greater Manchester county councils. Although the committee is having to re-assess its priorities and activities, I understand that basic work on the enforcement of local byelaws for the regulation of sea fisheries will be maintained.

Monetary Compensatory Amounts

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the level of monetary compensatory amounts payable in each EEC country at the present time; and what information he has about extra payments being made by West Germany and other EEC countries to raise the return to their farmers.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 25 April 1986, c. 248]: The monetary compensatory amount percentages applicable in each member state on 25 April are:

Germany currently applies a degressive aid through the VAT system and this was agreed in 1984 to offset the support price reductions in Germany resulting from the revaluation of the green German mark in January 1985. This and other state aids paid by member states are monitored by the European Commission to ensure that they are compatible with the treaty.

Export Refunds

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each agricultural product the amount of export refunds per tonne granted to British exporters at the most recent available date and the total spent by way of such refunds in 1985.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 23 April 1986, c. 164]: Details of export refunds for agricultural products are published in the Official Journal of the European Communities, copies of which are deposited in the Library of the House. Export refunds available to British exporters on 23 April 1986 were published in the following Official Journals:

Commodity	Official Journal reference and page

Exports refunds are also available in the tobacco and wine sectors but none was paid to British exporters in 1985.

Expenditure on export refunds on agricultural products in the United Kingdom in 1985 was £356 million.

Food Sales

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what sales of butter to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics have been completed under regulation 765/86.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 23 April 1986, c. 164]: Under regulation 765/86 successful bidders have until 1 December 1986 to remove the butter they have purchased from intervention stores and declare it for export to the appropriate customs authorities. It is not possible at this stage to say what sales have actually been completed in respect of the 100,000 tonnes for which bids were accepted on 10 April.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the EEC is authorised under the meeting of the protocol committee of 1 May 1985 to sell butter to Libya at prices below the minimum specified by the general agreement on tariffs and trade; and if any such sales have been contracted for.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 23 April 1986, c. 164]: The derogation from GATT minimum prices agreed on 31 May 1985 applies to any sale of butter more than 18 months old meeting certain conditions concerning the minimum quantities and delivery periods. There have been no sales to Libya meeting those criteria and none are anticipated.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to which countries the EEC was authorised to export food at special prices under regulation 765/86; and if any sales to Libya have been contracted under this regulation.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 23 April 1986, c. 164]: The countries to which butter may be sold under regulation 765/86 are listed in the annex to the regulation.

They are the USSR, Mongolia, India and Pakistan. The question of sales to Libya does not therefore arise under this regulation.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what sales of food have been concluded to date by the EEC under regulation 765/86; and if he will give details of the countries to which such sales have been concluded and, in each case, the amount of food and the price of sale expressed in terms of pence per pound.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 23 April 1986, c. 164]: Regulation 765/86 deals only with the sale of intervention butter more than 18 months old. The terms of the regulation provide for the price to be determined by competitive tender. To date bids have been accepted for a total of 100,000 tonnes for sale to the USSR. This consists of 20,000 tonnes with a minimum butterfat content of 80 per cent. and 80,000 tonnes with a minimum butterfat content of 82 per cent., at prices of 208·8 ecu/100 kg and 214·8 ecu/100 kg respectively. This gives an average sale price out of intervention of 59p per lb. After allowing for export refunds and the application of MCAs the net price is reduced to approximately 10p per lb, but when account is taken of transport and other costs, including a margin for the trade, the price to the Soviet authorities will be about 13p per lb.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the proportion of agricultural output accounted for by holdings of 1,000 standard man-days and over.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 21 April 1986, c. 43]: It is estimated that, in 1985, just over one half of agricultural output in the United Kingdom was accounted for by holdings of 1,000 standard man-days and over.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Libya-African National Congress Links

Mr. Dicks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has investigated the connections that exist between the Libyan regime of Colonel Gaddafi and the African National Congress; and what actions he proposes to take.

Mr. Eggar: We are aware that President Botha recently said such links exist and have noted Gaddafi's expressions of support for the African National Congress. We are, of course opposed to Libyan efforts to export violence anywhere in the world.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Value Added Tax

Mr. Heddle asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will consider extending the zero rate value added tax introduced in his Budget to the provision of supplies for frail elderly.

Mr. Brooke: It would not be appropriate to extend reliefs intended to cover aids for the handicapped to other categories such as the elderly.

Royal Ordnance Companies

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration has been given to tax concessions to be awarded in respect of the royal ordnance companies after the proposed flotation in July 1986.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Physical Education

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what steps he is taking to introduce training for physical education teachersin schools for instructing girls in self-defence;

(2) what steps he is taking to introduce self-defence education, as part of physical education, for girls in schools.

Mr. Chris Patten: It is for each local education authority to consider the in-service training needs of its teachers in the context of curricular policies and objectives. While the White Paper "Better Schools" published in March 1985 (Cmnd. 9469) makes clear the Government's view that physical education is an important component of the curriculum for all children in secondary schools, decisions about the detailed content of what is taught, such as whether it includes instruction in physical skills which can be used in self-defence, are properly matters for the schools themselves and the local education authorities by which they are maintained.

Burnham Further Education Regulations

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is satisfied that the current staffing arrangements under the Burnham further education regulations are adequate to provide education for students with special educational needs; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: My right hon. Friend has no reason to believe that the arrangements are inadequate. The allocation of teachers to particular categories of student is a matter for local discretion. The percentage of posts on each grade in a college is determined under the Burnham arrangements on the basis of the academic level of teaching. LEAs have discretion within fixed limits to increase the proportion of lecturers grade II where requisite for the recruitment and retention of teachers in shortage subjects.

The grading of courses system is under review as part of further education reform talks. The Government's view is that the structure should be flexible and responsive to the needs of customers and students.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations have been received by his Department in respect of the Burnham further education regulations as they affect provision for students with special educational needs.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Department received on 20 January a paper from the National Bureau for Handicapped Students about this matter. A reply issued on 31 January noting that the paper had also been submitted to the joint secretaries of the Burnham Further Education Committee and that it was a matter for negotiation in that committee.

Wigan

Mr. Stott asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to publish Her Majesty's inspector's report on Wigan's education system.

Sir Keith Joseph: The report will be published at the end of May.

Technical Schools

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will lay aside moneys for a special programme to support technical schools;

(2) what is his policy towards technical schools.

Mr. Dunn: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Langbaurgh (Mr. Holt) on 4 March, at column 114.

Comprehensive Schools

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy not to approve any further extension of comprehensive schools.

Mr Dunn: The initiative for proposing changes in the pattern of secondary school provision rests with local education authorities. My right hon. Friend considers all proposals on their individual merits, taking account of all the relevant circumstances, including the educational interest of all the pupils involved.

WALES

Acid Pollution

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Wales what systematic monitoring for acid pollution is carried out in rivers in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Welsh water authority regularly checks the level of acidity in river waters as part of the national harmonised monitoring scheme and in its assessment of river water quality. The Department is jointly funding with the Department of the Environment the study of acidification being jointly carried out by the Welsh water authority, the Natural Environment Research Council, the Forestry Commission and the university colleges of Wales, in the catchment areas feeding the Llyn Brianne reservoir.

Housing (Improvement Grants)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table indicating for each of the past three years the expenditure of each local housing authority in Wales on improvement grants and the number of applicants to which these grants were paid and the number of applications which were outstanding for each district for house improvement grants at 1 April; how many of these were made before 31 March 1984; and what is the estimated cost of the outstanding applications.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The available information is given in the following table. Information is not held centrally on the dates on which outstanding applications were made.

	Expenditure 1983-84 £000	Number of renovation grants paid 1983-84	Expenditure 1984-85 £000	Number of renovation grants paid 1984-85	Expenditure 1985-86* £000	Number of renovation grants paid 1985-86*	Number of applications outstanding 31 December 1985†	Estimated cost of outstanding applications £000

Spectacles

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the National Health Service hospitals in Wales which dispense spectacles to hospital eye patients on-site.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The following hospitals dispensed spectacles on-site in 1984, the latest year for which statistics are available: Bridgend General, Maesgwyn, Glanrhyd, Parc, Hensol, Llwynypia, Porth, Ystrad Mynach, South Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will ensure that health authorities in Wales introduce in-hospital dispensing of glasses in all cases where it does not take place now; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The proposals for the future dispensing of glasses in the hospital eye service have been the subject of a consultation exercise. The response is still being considered and it is too early to confirm the detailed arrangements which will be made for dispensing.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to set voucher values in Wales at such a level that no additional payment has to be made by in-patients in hospital currently entitled to free glasses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Long-stay patients in hospitals will continue to be entitled to basic glasses to meet their clinical need free of charge when the voucher system is introduced.

Mentally Handicapped People

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many persons (a) aged 19 years or under and (b) over 19 years of age were (i) discharged from each of the long-stay mental handicap hospitals in Wales during 1985 and (ii) admitted into such long-stay hospitals.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information requested is not yet available.

Nurses

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what are the numbers of practice nurses employed by family practitioners' practices in each of the family practices committee areas in Wales; what is the estimated total annual cost; and what was the percentage annual increase in the number of nurses employed over the past five years.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The numbers of practice nurses employed by family practitioner practices in each of the family practitioner committee areas in Wales are given in the following table:

	Practice Nurses (WTE) employed at 1 July 1985
Clwyd	3·0
Dyfed	20·6
Gwent	25·1
Gwynedd	13·4
Mid Glamorgan	18·7
Powys	2·2
South Glamorgan	9·5
West Glamorgan	16·8

The total whole-time equivalent of nurses has increased from 54·0 at 1 July 1980 to 109·3 at 1 July 1985, representing an average annual increase of 15·2 per cent.

No information is available centrally on the total annual cost.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the cash budget of the Welsh Development Agency in each of the years from 1979 to 1986-87; what was the increase in real terms in the budget of the Welsh Development Agency from 1979 to (a) 1981-82, (b) 1982-83, (c) 1984-85 and (d) 1986-87; and what was the increase in staff in the Welsh Development Agency from 1979 to 1986-87.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Welsh Development Agency's gross budget in cash terms in each year since 1979-80 is given below:

	£ million
1979-80	61·1
1980-81	83·4
1981-82	96·3
1982-83	77·9
1983-84	67·8
1984-85	70·0
1985-86*	63·1

* (provisional).

The agency's estimated budget in cash terms in 1986-87 is £76·8 million. Using the Treasury's latest GDP deflator which takes the 1984-85 financial year as a base, the change in the WDA's gross budget in real terms from 1979-80 to the years specified was as follows:

	£ million
a. 1981-82	+11·7
b. 1982-83	−15·6
c. 1984-85	−30·4
d. 1986-87*	−30·6

* (estimated).

The reduction in the agency's budget in real terms in recent years follows the ending of special allocations of funds for the steel closure programmes.

At 31 march 1979 the agency employed 499 staff. At 31 March 1986 the number was 421·5

SCOTLAND

Acid Pollution

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what systematic monitoring for acid pollution is carried out in rivers in Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: The control of river quality in Scotland rests with the river purification authorities (river purification boards and islands councils). They routinely monitor the quality, including acidity, of the rivers within their areas. In recent years a number of site-specific monitoring exercises have been established by individual authorities to assess the effects of acid deposition. In addition, the Government have recently commissioned the river purification boards to carry out jointly a systematic three-year study into the effects of acid deposition on a total of 150 catchments in Scotland.

Housing Support Grant

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will (a) state his reasons and (b) cite the statutory authority for the calculation of housing support grant on a figure of notional rate fund contribution per head; what factors are taken into account in determining the notional per head contribution; and if he will publish the names of those local authorities whose statutory rate fund contribution in the 1986-87 housing support grant settlement was lower than per head notional amount.

Mr. Ancram: The Housing (Financial Provisions) Scotland Act 1978 provides the statutory authority for determining the aggregate amount of housing support grant. As required by section 1(2)(c) of that Act, my right hon. and learned Friend consults the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities before estimating the aggregate amount of relevant income which might be expected to accrue to local authorities' housing revenue accounts in the grant year. My right hon. and learned Friend, with the agreement of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, has continued the practice adopted since the inception of housing support grant in 1979 of using a notional per head income amount in establishing the aggregate amount of relevant income. Factors taken into account in recent years in determining this notional amount have been the figure used in the previous year's Housing Support Grant (Scotland) Order and the rate of inflation. My right hon. and learned Friend has now undertaken to review this approach during discussions with the convention leading to the 1987-88 settlement.

In 1986-87, the overall level of housing support grant payable to Scottish local authorities will be some £4 million higher than would have been the case had statutory rate fund contribution limits replaced notional per head income amounts, determined as above, in the grant calculations. Seven of the 24 authorities receiving housing support grant in 1986-87 benefit, some substantially, from the calculation method employed. The remaining 17 authorities, in the following list have statutory rate fund contribution limits below the per head notional income amounts included in the relevant income calculations.

Spectacles

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will ensure that health boards in Scotland introduce in-hospital dispensing of glasses in all cases where it does not take place now; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: The Scottish Home and Health Department is presently consulting about new arrangements for patients in the hospital eye service to obtain their glasses or contact lenses. These arrangements do not affect the facilities for in-hospital dispensing of glasses which operate within a few health boards. I would not expect any increase in such facilities as a result of the changes proposed.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to set voucher values in Scotland at such a level that no additional payment has to be made by in-patients in hospital currently entitled to free glasses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: Government policy is to continue existing arrangements, whereby patients resident in hospital are supplied with free glasses.

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Fletcher asked the Secretary of State for Scotland against which authorities he proposes to take action on the grounds of excessive and unreasonable expenditure.

Mr. Rifkind: I have decided to initiate action in terms of section 5 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1966 in respect of the city of Edinburgh district council on the ground that its planned expenditure for 1986-87 is excessive and unreasonable. A letter has today been sent to the council proposing a rate reduction of 2·7p and inviting it to make representations about the proposed reduction.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Shipbuilding

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the tonnage of ships produced in each EEC country in each of the past five years together with the corresponding figures for 1972.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The following is the information requested, expressed in terms of compensated gross tonnage where available.

Tonnage of merchant ships completed

Country	*Units	1972	1981	1982	1983	†1984	1985
United Kingdom	Th.cgt	920	254	418	349	288	262
Belgium	Th.cgt	289	96	85	153	81	102
Denmark	Th.cgt	591	363	356	397	365	475
France	Th.cgt	839	302	310	376	339	157

Irish Republic	Th.gt	28	7	0	40	0	0
Portugal	Th.gt	16	1	18	312	8	41

* Th.cgt=thousand compensated gross tonnes.
Th.gt =thousand gross tonnes.

† In 1984, a new basis of measuring the tonnage of vessels was introduced so that figures thereafter are not directly comparable with those for earlier years.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing output in United Kingdom and German shipbuilding yards in each year since 1976.

Mr. Butcher: In terms of merchant shipbuilding, output for which comparable figures are readily available, the information is as follows:

Tonnage of merchant ships completed (thousand compensated gross tonnes)

	United Kingdom	West Germany
1976	824	1,630
1977*	693	1,299
1978	709	1,059
1979	584	617
1980	513	618
1981	254	922
1982	418	764
1983	349	926
1984*	288	704
1985	262	782

* Because of revisions in 1977 and again in 1984 affecting the calculation of compensated gross tonnage, figures in these and subsequent periods are not directly comparable with those for earlier years.

Life Assurance

Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his estimate of the number of holders in the United Kingdom of with-profit endowment life assurance policies.

Mr. Howard: It is estimated that at the end of 1984 insurance companies had between 25 million and 30 million with-profit endowment policies in force in the United Kingdom. It is not practicable to estimate the number of individuals holding those policies.

Electric Fences (Main Governors)

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he plans to take about the conflict between EEC directive 82-499 on main governors on electric fences and BS2632-1980 and BS800-1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: There is no direct conflict. I understand that manufacturers in the United Kingdom have raised a problem about the suitability of the radio interference requirement for high energy mains governors on electric fences contained in BS800-1983. They have been advised to raise the problem in the appropriate BSI technical committee.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. Denzil Davies asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the effect on British trade with the Eastern bloc of United Kingdom involvement in the strategic defence initiative research programme, and in particular of American concern to limit the transfer of technology.

Mr. Butcher: I shall reply to the right hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Denzil Davies asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether any legislative changes are proposed to bring the British system of export administration into line with the Anglo-American memorandum of understanding on technology transfer, produced as a result of British involvement in strategic defence initiative research; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: No legislative changes to United Kingdom export administration are proposed as a result of the Anglo-United States memorandum of understanding.

Trade Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the first three months of 1986 at an annual rate compared with the same three months in 1985 and the year 1970 (a) imports and exports of manufactures between the United Kingdom and the European Economic Community and other countries, and (b) imports and exports less crude oil between the United Kingdom and the European Economic Community and from other countries; and if he will make a statement about the decline in exports of manufactures in the first quarter of the current year, compared with 1985 and the reasons therefor.

Mr. Alan Clark: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Prices

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consultations he has had, and with which organisations, on a new general prohibition on misleading price indications and on a supporting statutory code of practice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: My Department has consulted a wide range of trade, consumer and enforcement interests, with helpful and encouraging results. Over 500 copies of the report of the interdepartmental working party on the review of legislation on this subject were circulated in 1984. In the light of comments received in response from approximately 150 sources, the Government's decision to go ahead with new legislation, providing a general prohibition on misleading price indications with a supporting statutory code of practice, was announced in March 1985. A first draft of the proposed code of practice was sent out in July 1985 to some 200 organisations, of whom about 75 responded. In the light of their comments a second draft of the code of practice was sent out in January this year to 240 organisations, of which 60 have responded with their comments. At each stage my officials have held discussions with a number of respondents who wished to expand on their submissions. The draft code is currently being further revised taking those comments into account and I then expect it to be in a form ready to accompany proposals to Parliament for the relevant legislation which will be introduced as soon as parliamentary time is available.

West Germany

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report his estimate of the effect which the increase of 35 per cent. in the real rate of exchange between sterling and the deutschmark had on United Kingdom imports from and exports to West Germany between the first quarter of 1979 and the third quarter of 1985; what were the nominal rates of exchange in each period; what is the present rate of exchange; and what is his estimate of the difference in the rate of inflation between the United Kingdom and West Germany since the third quarter of 1985.

Mr. Alan Clark: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report his estimate of the increase in United Kingdom relative export prices compared with those of West Germany since the first quarter of 1979 together with the change in the balance of trade in manufactures between the two countries.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The United Kingdom's export prices for manufactures are estimated to have increased by about 28 per cent. compared with those of the Federal Republic of Germany between the first quarter of 1979 and the fourth quarter of 1985. The crude deficit on our trade in manufactures with Germany increased from £0·6 billion to £1·4 billion over this period.

PRIME MINISTER

Cruise Missiles

Q43. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister what movements took place on 10 and 11 April of cruise missiles from their base at Greenham common.

The Prime Minister: A routine cruise missile training exercise began on 11 April. As we have made clear previously, neither warheads nor fuel for the missiles are carried on these exercises. We do not give details of the training exercises conducted by nuclear missile units.

Military Bands

Q82. Mr. Jessel asked the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government intend to make military bands available for any events in London in July.

The Prime Minister: Yes.

Fontainebleau Agreement

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on how the outcome of the Fontainebleau agreement among Heads of EEC Governments has fulfilled the Government's expectations.

The Prime Minister: The Fontainebleau abatement arrangement has been working as agreed. We have received the 1,000 mecu (£605 million) we were promised in respect of 1984. The 1986 Community budget already contains provision for our abatement in respect of 1985 of 1,400 mecu (£900 million), from which we are benefiting through reduced VAT contributions at the rate of £75 million a month. The Commission and the Council have undertaken to uprate this abatement through a supplementary budget this year in the light of the latest information about our contributions to and receipts from the Community budget in 1985.

EC (Value Added Tax)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister whether she expects other member states to seek agreement to an increase in the value added tax contribution in the foreseeable future.

The Prime Minister: I expect the other member states to honour the Fontainebleau agreement. I made the United Kingdom's position clear in my response to the hon. Member for Grimsby's previous question on 21 April, at column 1.

Shipbuilding (Exchange Rate)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister what recent representations she has received from the management of shipyards concerning the exchange rate.

The Prime Minister: No such representations have been received.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. Denzil Davies asked the Prime Minister who will be responsible for administering the security requirements placed by the United States Government as a condition of participation upon British companies or institutes involved in the strategic defence initiative research programme; and what will be the general nature of these requirements and the penalties for their transgression.

The Prime Minister: As the Government have stated on a number of occasions recently, the detailed terms and conditions related to British participation in the SDI research programme are confidential. Responsibility for administering these arrangements from the United Kingdom point of view will rest with the Ministry of Defence, consulting other Government Departments as necessary.

Bilderberg Conference

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Prime Minister for what purpose she attended the Bilderberg conference.

The Prime Minister: The Bilderberg conferences are privately organised international gatherings. I was invited to attend this year's conference on this basis and was pleased to accept.

Engagements

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 1 May.

Mr. Wallace asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 1 May.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 1 May.

Mr. Flannery asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 1 May.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I shall be leaving for Korea and the economic summit in Tokyo.

Terrorist Incidents

Mr. Kaufman asked the Prime Minister if she will list all terrorist incidents which have taken place in Great Britain since 4 May 1979 with, for each, the numbers of those killed and injured, together with details and cost of damage caused.

The Prime Minister [pursuant to her reply, 22 April 1986, c. 122]: Statistics of terrorist incidents which have taken place in Great Britain since 4 May 1979 are as follows. These do not include incidents apparently caused by extremist nationalist or anarchist groups based in Great Britain, or by extremist animal rights activists. I regret details of the nature and cost of the damage are not available.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Libyan Nationals

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to count Libyans in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waddington: It is estimated from immigration records that there are about 7,000 Libyan nationals in the United Kingdom subject to immigration control.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Libyan nationals have been deported to date; how many further Libyan nationals are likely to be removed; how many Libyan nationals remain in the United Kingdom; and if he will detail the specific purposes for those nationals being granted temporary residence.

Mr. Waddington: Since 1 January 1984, 41 Libyan nationals have been deported on the ground that their deportation was conducive to the public good in the interests of national security, relations with another country or for other reasons of a political nature. We cannot predict whether any further Libyans will be deported on similar grounds because every case must be considered individually in the light of information before us at the time, but my right hon. Friend will not hesitate to use to the full his powers under the Immigration Act 1971. It is estimated that there are about 7,000 Libyan nationals currently in the United Kingdom subject to immigration control and their basis of stay will vary widely. It is not possible to provide the specific detail requested except at disproportionate cost.

Immigration

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many cases representations originally made by telephone by right hon. and hon. Members in immigration cases were not subsequently pursued in writing, in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: The available information relates to representations in cases of passengers initially refused entry at ports. In the period from 17 April 1985 to 16 April 1986 there were about 380 cases in which letters to right hon. or hon. Members were prepared following stops which had been imposed but not followed up within at least four weeks by written representations.

West Yorkshire Metropolitan Police

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of West Yorkshire as to how many young people from the ethnic minorities he was proposing to recruit as cadets in the current year; why he did not support the proposal for a cadet force; and if he is satisfied with the proportion of officers from the ethnic minorities in the West Yorkshire metropolitan police;

(2) if he will reconsider his decision to set the cadet establishment of the West Yorkshire metropolitan police at nil; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand that the West Yorkshire police authority is maintaining a police cadet corps of 33 and proposes to appoint a further 54 cadets in the current financial year. Two of the present number are from ethnic minorities, and the police authority has been encouraging further applications from ethnic minorities.

My right hon. Friend has received a request recently from the police authority for him to make a variation in the establishment scheme for that authority for 1986-87 by including 87 cadet posts. He is giving this careful consideration, in the light of further advice from Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary. In reaching his earlier decision to omit cadets from the establishment scheme, he took into account the force's ability to obtain well-qualified candidates by direct recruitment and the relatively high cost of maintaining a cadet corps.

Football Matches (Public Safety)

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any further plans to reinforce public safety on trains in addition to football specials carrying fans to and from soccer matches; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No; but if my hon. Friend has a particular point in mind my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department will be glad to consider it.

Mr. J. C. Galbraith

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the letters to him dated 27 January and 24 March from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. J. C. Galbraith of 5a Norman Road, Rusholme, Manchester.

Mr. Hurd: I am writing to the right hon. Member today.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in respect of each police force area in England and Wales, what is the percentage change between 1978 and 1985 in (a) total crimes, (b) crimes of violence against the person, (c) burglaries, (d) offences of theft or handling stolen goods, (e) offences of fraud or forgery and (f) offences of criminal damage, taking account, where necessary, of changes in recording practice.

Mr. Mellor: Numbers of notifiable offences recorded by each police force for each of the offence groups requested are published annually in the Command Papers on "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" and most recently in a Home Office Statistical Bulletin for 1985 (table 6 of issue number 4/86). Because of changes in the counting rules which were introduced in 1980 to secure greater uniformity of recording, it is not possible to make precise comparisons between 1978 and 1985. The three offence groups thought to be most affected by these changes were theft and handling stolen goods (where the overall numbers may have been increased), fraud and forgery (where the numbers were probably reduced) and criminal damage (where the numbers may have been reduced); the other offence groups are thought to have been affected to a lesser extent. However, the effects probably differed from one police force area to another.

Police Complaints Authority

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take action to ensure that evidence collected by the Police Complaints Authority is published in full.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We have no plans to change the position described in my reply on 27 February to the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike), at columns 654-55.

Mr. Ben Rabha

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will reconsider his decision to allow the continued presence of Mr. Ben Rabha in the United Kingdom, in the light of recent terrorist activities by other Libyan nationals.

Mr. Waddington: There are no grounds on present information on which we would be justified in seeking to deport Mr. Ben Rabha.

ENERGY

Nuclear Industry Radioactive Waste Executive

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Energy how the publicity budget of the Nuclear Industry Radioactive Waste Executive for 1986-87 is divided between the constituent parts of the Nuclear Industry Radioactive Waste Executive; what is the extent of his Department's contribution; and what are the procedures for auditing this expenditure.

Mr. Goodlad: I have written to the chairman of United Kingdom NIREX Ltd., asking him to provide this information. My Department makes no direct contribution to the company's publicity budget.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby of 21 April, if he will give a breakdown of the publicity budget of the Nuclear Industry Radioactive Waste Executive between the four areas shortlisted for dumps, the different media employed, meetings and staff.

Mr. Goodlad: This is a matter for the board of United Kingdom NIREX Ltd. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the number, pay and previous experience of the directors of the Nuclear Industry Radioactive Waste Executive.

Mr. Goodlad: I have asked the chairman of United Kingdom NIREX Ltd. to write to the hon. Member with this information.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Sectetary of State for Energy whether his Department supervises the accuracy of publicity and information material issued by the Nuclear Industry Radioactive Waste Executive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad No. This is a matter for the board of United Kingdom NIREX Ltd.

Nuclear Materials

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether any (a) plutonium, (b) enriched uranium or (c) other special nuclear materials in the United Kingdom have ever been withdrawn from EEC ownership under the Euratom treaty, article 86, and re-designated non-civil.

Mr. Goodlad: [pursuant to his reply, 27 March 1986, c. 557]: Nuclear material has on occasion been withdrawn from Euratom safeguards for national security reasons in accordance with the provisions of the UK-Euratom-IAEA safeguards agreement.

EMPLOYMENT

Sunday Working

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General whether he will estimate the number of people who are currently working on Sundays.

Mr. Lang: Preliminary results from the 1985 Labour force survey indicate that, in the spring of 1985, around 5·5 million people worked on one or more of the preceding four Sundays.

On a different basis, the Institute for Fiscal Studies has estimated that 4·1 million people worked regularly on Sundays and another 4·7 million worked occasionally on Sundays in 1984.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Sheerman asked the Paymaster General how much expenditure there has been on the training element for recipients of enterprise allowances since the scheme's inception.

Mr. Lang: Applicants for the enterprise allowance scheme are encouraged to take advantage of the training available through the Manpower Service's Commission training for enterprise programme and the counselling services of the small firms service. However funds are not separately allocated for EAS applicants to undertake training.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Paymaster General how much money is allocated for the training provision for recipients of enterprise allowance in 1986-87.

Mr. Lang: People on the enterprise allowance scheme can take advantage of both public and private sector training including the provision made available through the Manpower Services Commission's training for enterprise programme. In addition the commission has introduced a revised system of induction and follow up of enterprise allowance participants. This new system will include a one day self employment awareness session to replace the present two hour information session attended by all applicants to the scheme. One of the main purposes of the revised system is to highlight the importance of enterprise training and its benefits to the participants' businesses as well as providing an introduction to basic business concepts. Follow up monitoring by MSC staff will be enhanced to reinforce the emphasis on training and business counselling for participants. A total of £1·8 million has been provided in 1986-87 specifically to fund these enhanced arrangements.

Community Programme

Mr. Sheerman asked the Paymaster General how much money has been spent on the training component of the community programme since its inception, over and above that taken for operating costs and wages.

Mr. Lang: From July 1984 to the end of March 1986 some £4·4 million has been spent on additional training for community programme participants to that already provided from the programmes operating and other costs.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Paymaster General what sums are being allocated for the training component of the community programme for 1986-87 over and above that allowed for operating costs and wages.

Mr. Lang: In 1986-87 £5·5 million will be spent on additional training to that already provided from the programmes operating and other costs.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

UN General Assembly

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the occasions on which all members of the European Economic Community did not vote together at the United Nations General Assembly, since January 1985.

Mr. Eggar: The Twelve members of the Community were divided on 114 of the resolutions, amendments and paragraphs put to the vote in the United Nations General Assembly in 1985. This compares with 278 occasions on which the Twelve joined consensus or voted together. A list will be placed in the Library of the House of Commons as soon as possible.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those occasions at the United Nations General Assembly during the past year in which the United Kingdom and the United States of America voted together in a way different from the rest of the European Economic Community countries.

Mr. Eggar: The United Kingdom voted in the same way as the United States of America and in a different way from other members of the Community on the following six resolutions during the 40th Session of the United Nations General Assembly:

On each of these resolutions the vote of Community countries was split between voting for, voting against and abstaining.

40/53	Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the Specialised Agencies and the International institutions associated with the United Nations.
40/57	Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence of Colonial Countries and Peoples.
40/58	Dissemination of information on decolonisation.
40/64F	Programme of work of the Special Committee Against Apartheid.
40/64I	Concerted international action for the elimination of apartheid.
40/94G	General and complete disarmament: Prohibition of the production of fissionable material for weapon purposes.

Libya

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will detail in the Official Report the exact advice recently given to British citizens currently residing and working in Libya.

Mr. Eggar: A letter was sent to members of the British community by the head of the British interests section of the Italian embassy in Tripoli on 27 April. Its text was as follows:

"Although no incident of harassment of British citizens has been reported to me, I have to advise you that if you or your spouse and children have no urgent need to remain in this country, you or they should leave it as soon as possible. It is wise to do so while normal scheduled flights are available as there is no certainty that it will be possible to improvise an evacuation by other means if the Airports close.

British companies operating here should ensure that they have no excess staff. It is, of course, your responsibility to decide whether or not to act on this advice and you should take into account that Colonel Qadhafi has said that foreign workers, including British and US citizens, are welcome to stay. However you decide, would you please let me know your decision?

If you intend to stay and have not registered with the British Interests Section, you should do so immediately by telephone. The number is 31191. The information you give is treated as strictly confidential and may not be passed on even to other Government Departments. You may use the same number to obtain further information."

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will now recommend to all British citizens currently residing and working in Libya that they should leave the country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have made it clear since the break in relations in April 1984 that British citizens choosing to live and work in Libya do so on their own responsibility and that our ability to provide consular assistance and protection is limited.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Assembly Elections

16. Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the timing of fresh elections to the Northern Ireland Assembly.

25. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the future of the Northern Ireland Assembly.

Mr. Tom King: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply which I gave to a question by the hon. Member for Middlesbrough (Mr. Bell) a few moments ago.

Human Rights

17. Mr. Archer asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken to protect human rights and prevent discrimination in Northern Ireland within the framework of the Anglo-Irish agreement.

Mr. Scott: Under article 5*(a)* the Intergovernmental Conference can take an interest in measures to protect human rights and to prevent discrimination. However, it remains for the British Government to take decisions on these matters insofar as they relate to Northern Ireland. In doing so we take account of many different views, including any expressed by the Irish Government. The joint statements issued after each meeting of the Conference which note those issues which have been discussed there have been placed in the Library.

Integrated Education

19. Mr. Livsey asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what specific action he proposes to take regarding experiments in integrated education.

Dr. Mawhinney: None. However, it remains the Government's policy to encourage integrated education in Northern Ireland where there is a clearly identified local wish for it.

Wages Bill

20. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what impact he envisages the provisions of the Wages Bill will have on employment in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Boyson: The wages Bill extends to Northern Ireland only insofar as it contains an enabling provision which would permit provisions corresponding to Part III of the Bill relating to redundancy rebates in Northern Ireland by Order-in-Council subject to the negative resolution procedure. It is not envisaged that this provision will have any impact on employment in Northern Ireland.

Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference

21. Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when it is proposed to convene the next meeting of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference.

Mr. Tom King: It is not our practice to announce meetings of the Intergovernmental Conference in advance.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

22. Mr. Gow asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress he has made in securing acceptance in the Province of the Anglo-Irish agreement.

Mr. Tom King: My ministerial colleagues and I have taken and will continue to take every opportunity to explain the true nature and advantages of the agreement for all sections of the community in Northern Ireland.

26. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will consider calling a conference on the implementation of the Anglo-Irish agreement, involving the British Governmentt, the Irish Government and the relevant political parties of Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: I have no such plans. I believe that the way forward now is for the elected representatives of the constitutional political parties to discuss their concerns with the United Kingdom Government. I hope the Unionist leaders, in particular, will agree to resume our dialogue.

5. Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken to try to ensure that the terms of the Anglo-Irish agreement are more fully understood in the Province.

Mr. Tom King: My ministerial colleagues and I have taken and will continue to take every opportunity to explain the true nature and advantages of the Agreement for all sections of the community in Northern Ireland.

23. Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he expects to arrange discussions with Unionist politicians and others about the implementation of the Anglo-Irish agreement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and I want discussions to be renewed with Unionist politicians about a range of matters affecting Northern Ireland. We hope that it will be possible shortly to start exploratory talks.

Food Processing Industry

24. Mr. Powley asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress is being made by the Industrial Development Board in developing the potential of the food processing industry.

Dr. Boyson: During the past two years the Industrial Development Board has offered financial aid totalling £39 million to processing companies against investment of £124 million. That support has helped to create 1,650 new jobs and maintain employment of some 3,700 people in the industry.

Plastic Bullets

27. Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if there are any plans to discontinue the use of plastic bullets in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: No. We look with an open mind at any new ideas for controlling the vicious public disorder that occurs from time to time in Northern Ireland. But unless an equally effective method is found it would be wrong to suspend the use of plastic baton rounds.

Retraining Programme

28. Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what arrangements the Government are making to facilitate the retraining of workers in Northern Ireland to meet the needs of technological change.

Dr. Boyson: I have recently announced the introduction, from June 1986, of a new manpower training scheme. This pilot scheme will provide enhanced support for major training projects in businesses which trade in external markets. We have set aside £2 million to fund it this year. Its aim is to improve training for new and developing skills, particularly those imposed by technological change.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

29. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures he is taking to seek to retain serving officers in the Royal Ulster Constabulary and Royal Ulster Constabulary Reserve; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: No measures are necessary to retain police officers in the Royal Ulster Constabulary. The Royal Ulster Constabulary and the Royal Ulster Constabulary full-time reserve reached full established strength in December 1985 and in the period 1 January-31 March 1986 the numbers leaving the force have shown a substantial reduction on the same period last year. Applications to join the Royal Ulster Constabulary have maintained a high level. During 1985 some 4,600 applications were received for the Royal Ulster Constabulary together with some 3,500 applications for the full-time reserve. In the period 1 December–18 April, some 1,700 applications were received for the Royal Ulster Constabulary and some 1,000 for the Royal Ulster Constabulary full-time reserve.

Marriages

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many marriages there have been in each of the past five years in Northern Ireland; and how many marriages there were in the first quarter of 1986.

Mr. Needham: The following is the information:

Year	Number of marriages
1981	9,636
1982	9,913
1983	9,990
1984	10,358
1985	10,425

First quarter of 1986 not yet available.

Benefits

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy to gather information on the number of suspected (a) Republican and (b) other members of paramilitary organisations in receipt of unemployment and other social benefits.

Mr. Needham: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Spectacles

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will ensure that health boards in Northern Ireland introduce in-hospital dispensing of glasses in all cases where it does not take place now; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: No changes in the current dispensing arrangements are planned.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy to set voucher values in Northern Ireland at such a level that no additional payment has to be made by in-patients in hospital currently entitled to free glasses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: There are no plans to change the present arrangements whereby patients resident in hospital are supplied with free glasses.

Community Technical Aid

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland will respond to the request made by Community Technical Aid for funding for 1986-87; and whether the Department will give an indication as to the size of the grant it is prepared to give in 1986-87 and in future years.

Mr. Needham: Community technical aid will be advised as soon as possible on its application for a further period of funding from the Department.

Departmental Costs

Mr. Maples asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the 1986-87 running cost limit for the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments.

Mr. Tom King: The 1986 Public Expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 9702) set out at Table 3.18.49 the targeted provision for departmental running costs of the Northern Ireland Office (NIO) and Northern Ireland Departments for the period from 1986-87 to 1988-89. Following final review of the projected expenditure requirements for 1986-87, which revealed higher prison costs than had been projected previously, and also taking account of the enterprise and employment measures announced at the time of the Budget last month, I have decided to set a running costs limit of £446 million for the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments, £6 million higher than the target shown in Cmnd. 9702. Further details of provision for individual departments are set out in the appropriate Estimates volumes.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the effect on the rate of long-term supplementary benefits received by claimants in Great Britain who move to Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: Claimants aged 60 or over who move to Northern Ireland from Great Britain would continue to qualify for the long term supplementary benefit rate. Other eligible claimants would receive the long term rate after they had been on supplementary benefit or a long-term incapacity benefit for 52 weeks.

Business Start-ups

Mr. Burt asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what Her Majesty's Government are doing to stimulate new business start-ups in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Boyson: Last month I announced additional allocations specifically to assist new small businesses by providing 400 additional places under the Enterprise Allowance Scheme and 200 further grants under the Local Enterprise Development Unit's enterprise grant programme, which provides a grant of up to £5,000 for new business start-ups.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Pension Age

Mr. Lewis Stevens asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the latest estimate of the cost of reducing men's pension age to 60 years.

Mr. Newton: At 1985 benefit rates our latest estimate is that it would cost over £3 billion.

AIDS

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his Department supplies regular information regarding the incidence and pattern of acquired immune deficiency syndrome in the United Kingdom to the regional offices of the World Health Organisation and the headquarters in Geneva.

Mr. Hayhoe: The communicable disease surveillance centre, which is part of the Government-funded Public Health Laboratory Service, provides quarterly information on AIDS in the United Kingdom to the organisation's European collaborating centre on AIDS in Paris. This is passed on to the organisation's headquarters in Geneva.

Repetitive Strain Injury

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people claimed industrial injury benefit for repetitive strain injury in 1985; and what where their geographical locations.

Mr. Newton: Two forms of repetive strain injury are prescribed as industrial diseases. These are cramp of the hand or forearm due to repetitive movements (prescribed disease A4) and tenosynovitis (prescribed disease A8). In the year ending September 1985 awards of benefit under the industrial injuries scheme in respect of these two conditions were made as follows:

	Prescribed Disease A4	Prescribed Disease A8
North Eastern Region	—	116
London North Region	—	25
London South Region	—	18
Midlands Region	—	103
North-Western Region	2	77
Wales and South Western Region	1	38
Scotland	—	13
Total	3	390

Information on the number of unsuccessful claims made is not available.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to publicise among general practitioners and the general public the risks of repetitive strain injury.

Mr. Newton: No. The causes of repetitive strain injury are not always easy to identify, but it can be associated with work activities. The Health and Safety Executive has a number of initiatives concerned with this problem.

Residential Homes

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will now publish the rules governing the eligibility for supplementary benefit of residents of private and voluntary homes; and how these rules affect topping up funds where home charges are in excess of the national limit of his Department.

Mr. Newton: The rules governing entitlement to supplementary benefit are set out in the supplementary benefit regulations. The specific provisions for determining the requirements of people in private and voluntary homes are contained in the Supplementary Benefit (Requirements) Regulations 1983 (as amended by the Supplementary Benefit (Requirements and Resources) Miscellaneous Provisions (No. 2) Regulations 1985). Guidance for adjudication officers on the interpretation of these regulations is contained in circular S 13/85.

Information on local authorities' powers in respect of residents whose charges are in excess of the supplementary benefit limits is contained in LASSL (86)1. Copies of the regulations, the guidance to local offices and the local authority circular are in the Library.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will instigate an inquiry as a matter of urgency into the treatment of supplementary benefit claimants in a number of private homes in Merseyside and north Wales.

Mr. Whitney: The Registered Homes Act 1984 places responsibility for registering and inspecting residential care homes on local authority social services departments. I would suggest therefore that the hon. Member pursues his inquiries with the local authorities concerned.

Artificial Eyes

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his Department has any plans to privatise the National Health Service providing the supply and maintenance of artificial eyes; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: No. However, the hon. Member will be aware that artificial eyes are currently provided through the artifical limb and appliance centres, whose services generally are the subject of the recent McColl report. The McColl review team did not consider the artificial eye service in any detail, but noted that experiments were in progress to examine the overall effectiveness of the service if artifical eyes were made and fitted locally. It recommended that strategic decisions on the future direction of the service, including consideration of possible alternative ways of providing it should await the experiment findings. The experiments are in fact complete, and a report on them is expected to be ready later this year.

NHS (Housing Stock)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what expenditure has been estimated by health authorities as necessary to bring National Health Service housing stock up to the standard required to accommodate priority need National Health Service staff.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that this information is not held centrally.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many families currently accommodated in housing stock covered by his Department's circular HC(85)19 may be classified as other staff in each health authority; and how many of these will lose their entitlement to accommodation under the provisions of the circular.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that information about the number of families in health authority accommodation is not held centrally.

Tranquilliser Addiction

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many known cases of tranquilliser addiction occurred during 1982, 1983 and 1984, respectively.

Mr. Whitney: I am sorry I cannot give my hon. Friend this information. It is not collected centrally.

Spectacles

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if voucher levels for long-stay patients in hospitals will be adequate to ensure that patients getting complex lenses will not have to pay more than they do now; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Long-stay patients in hospitals will continue to be entitled to basic glasses to meet their clinical needs free of charge when the voucher scheme is introduced.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will ensure that health authorities will introduce in-hospital dispensing of glasses where it does not take place at the current time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: The proposals for the future dispensing of glasses in the hospital eye service have been the subject of a consultation exercise. The response is still being considered and it is too early to confirm the detailed arrangements which will be made for dispensing.

Surplus Hospital Land

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy with regard to the disposal of surplus hospital land for commercial development.

Mr. Hayhoe: To require health authorities to keep land holdings continually under review and carry out a systematic rationalisation of the estate with the aim of disposing of all surplus land and buildings.

Authorities are required to seek the optimum planning and marketing situation in respect of surplus properties.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what resources will be made available and what phasing he envisages in respect of the implementation of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Bill.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Easington (Mr. Dormand) on 29 April, at columns 781-82. It is not at present possible to form firm views about the possible phasing of implementation.

Mortality Statistics

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the latest information he has regarding standardised mortality ratios of men aged 15 to 64 years according to social class based on occupations recorded in the 1981 census and deaths in years prior to and following the census.

Mr. Whitney: Information on standardised mortality ratios of men aged 20 to 64 in Great Britain according to social class based on occupations recorded in the 1981 census for the period 1979-80 and 1982-83 combined, will be published shortly in the Registrar General's "Decennial Supplement on Occupational Mortality". These figures will not be directly comparable with those given in my reply on 24 January, at column 348, for reasons that will be explained fully in the report.

Further information for the period 1981 to 1983 should be available in a few months' time from the OPCS longitudinal study.

Primary Health Care

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, in the series of conferences he has announced to take place in cities around England to discuss primary health care, the invitations to professional bodies to participate will include nursing organisations on the same basis as medical, dental and other bodies; and if the number of nurses involved will be comparable to those of other organisations.

Mr. Hayhoe: Yes.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services in which areas of the United Kingdom he is planning to assess the quality of primary care services; how many general practices will be involved; when he expects this experiment to be completed; who will undertake it; and whether he will publish the results.

Mr. Hayhoe: Decisions have not yet been taken.

Voluntary Unemployment

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons have been subject to disqualification of unemployment or supplementary benefit in each of the last 10 years as a result of voluntary unemployment; what was the breakdown of the main grounds each year; what was the saving net of tax each year; and what he estimates will be the saving from extension to 13 weeks in future.

Mr. Newton: The numbers of people subject to disqualification of unemployment benefit as a result of "voluntary unemployment" under section 20(1) of the Social Security Act 1975 are given in the table.

Year	Leaving voluntarily	Misconduct	Others	Total
1976	396,429	150,133	4,170	550,732
1977	439,632	140,361	6,279	586,272
1978	448,961	131,379	5,517	585,857
1979	416,318	121,932	8,402	546,652
1980	350,303	134,870	9,674	494,847
1981	245,779	103,172	5,267	354,218
1982	255,822	96,318	3,024	355,164
1983	261,284	94,696	3,226	359,206
1985	298,206	98,738	9,420	406,364

Notes:
1. Figures for 1984 are not available.
2. "Others" are refusal of suitable employment, neglect to avail of an opportunity of employment, failure to carry out reasonable official recommendations to assist to find work, refusal or failure to avail of approved training.

Claimants are not disqualified for receiving supplementary benefit because of voluntary unemployment, but instead their benefit is subject to a voluntary unemployment deduction. Available statistics do not show the detailed reason for the reduction. The following table shows the number of cases with such deductions.

Year	Number
1977	377,000
1978	338,000
1979	364,000
1980	260,000
1981	195,000
1982	182,000
1983	299,000

Notes:
1. Figures for 1976, 1984 and 1985 are not available.
2. The figures have been estimated from information in the annual statistical inquiry, on the assumption that deductions apply for, on average, four weeks.
3. The figures include deductions made pending a final decision and it is estimated that 40 per cent. would be refunded when a decision went in the claimant's favour.
4. The figures in the two tables overlap where supplementary benefit is paid to people who are disqualified for receiving unemployment benefit.

The financial effect net of tax each year is not available, but it is estimated that the net reduction in benefit expenditure in 1985 is around £25 million. The further net reduction in benefit expenditure which might follow from the proposed change in the rules has not yet been finally assessed, but we estimate it provisionally to be of the order of £25 million to £30 million.

Board and Lodging

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will detail the results of the survey carried out in each local office on claimants covered by the board and lodging rules, detailing the number of case papers studied, the numbers awarded back pay and the numbers exempted from the board and lodging rules.

Mr. Newton: I assume the hon. Member is concerned about the payment of arrears of supplementary benefit board and lodging allowances following the Court Appeal ruling in December 1985. Information is not available in the precise form requested. The available information to date shows some 25,000 individual claimants have received back payments of supplementary benefit totalling some £3 million. On the application of the time restrictions on payment as a boarder since November, a recent survey of some 1,400 new and repeat claimants under 26 in the south-east, south-west and the midlands showed that some 25 per cent. qualified for exemption.

Child Care

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what responses he has received to recent consultative documents on child care and day care law; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fowler: We received nearly 200 responses to the working party report on the review of child care law in England and Wales, published as a consultative document in October 1985. A large majority of the report's recommendations were widely supported.

We also received comments on a consultative document on day care law published at the same time as the review. These again have shown wide support for the proposals.

The Government will now draw up their proposals for child care law in England and Wales, and for day care, and publish these in the autumn as the basis for legislation which it will introduce as soon as parliamentary time can be found.

Many organisations commenting on the review of child care law have expressed their strong support for a family court which they believe would provide a more satisfactory forum for the operation of any new legislation than the present juvenile courts. My right hon. and noble Friend the Lord Chancellor will publish soon a consultative document on options for a family court. The Government hope this will help to promote consensus on the form such a court could take. But I cannot anticipate the outcome of the consultation or any Government decision on this matter.

Some of those commenting on the review of child care law have said that no changes to child care law should take place in advance of a family court. The Government do not accept this need be so and continue to see advantage in not delaying desirable improvements in child care law pending possible introduction of a family court.

I have also now received the agreed report of joint working party of Government and local authority association officers which has given an estimate of the costs of the child care law report's recommendations. Quantifiable costs would amount to £4¼ million per annum: just under £2 million falling directly on local authorities and the rest on the magistrates courts service, legal aid and High Court administration. Some other possible costs were identified but could not be quantified. Copies of the report have been placed in the Library.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agriculture Production (Expenditure)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much was spent by the Government of the Federal German Republic by way of special rebate of value added tax to German farmers in 1985; and what effect this had on output of common agricultural policy products.

Mr. Gummer: As a result of an agreement at the 1984 price fixing the German green rate was revalued from 1 January 1985 which reduced support prices in Germany by amounts ranging from 4·1 to 5·2 per cent. In order to alleviate the impact of this it was agreed that a transitional adjustment could be made through the German VAT system. The Commission is due to report on the operation on this system and has been pressed to bring forward its report.

Apples and Pears

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will bring up to date the information on United Kingdom output and exports of apples and pears given in the answer of 6 April 1984, Official Report, column 674.

Mrs. Fenner: The following is the information required:

Net Farm Incomes

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will bring up to date the information on net farm incomes in table 4f1 of the evidence on agriculture submitted to the Treasury and Civil Service Committee by Her Majesty's Treasury on 9 November 1984 in response to its questionnaire on the economic and financial consequences of EEC membership.

Mrs. Fenner: The information requested is given in the table:

Notes: Pairs of years relate to an identical sample of farms. A major break in series occurred in 1978-79. It is not therefore possible to make a meaningful comparison of the two periods. A further break occurred in 1982-83.

White Papers

Mr. Cash asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will replace the White Papers "Food from Our Own Resources, 1975" and "Farming for the Nation, 1979", by a new White Paper relevant to current requirements.

Mr. Jopling: It is my aim to ensure, through speeches, debates and similar occasions, that those concerned with agriculture are kept fully informed of developments in our thinking on the future of the industry. I can understand those who suggest that a new White Paper would be helpful, but I am conscious that, given the pace of developments it could become out of date within days of publication. It is the decisions we make which secure the future of the industry and the recent agreement in the Agriculture Council shows a clear purpose in achieving a further step towards a better balance in the CAP.

Animals (Slaughter)

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what dates the United Kingdom Government signed European convention No. 102 on the protection of animals for slaughter; when Her Majesty's Government intend to ratify it; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: The Government signed the Convention on 10 May 1979. Certain amendments to our legislation will be required before ratification is possible; and we are considering the necessary changes in conjunction with implementation of our response to the Farm Animal Welfare Council's reports on the slaughter of livestock.

Agricultural Expenditure

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what estimate has been made by the Commission of the cost of the European Economic Community's agricultural activities in 1986 in consequence of the 1986 price review; what was the figure for 1985; and what is the level of expenditure permitted under the strict budgetary controls agreed in December 1984, disregarding the factor of any allowances which can be made under this agreement for exceptional or aberrant circumstances;

(2) what new areas of spending by national Governments on agriculture are permitted or obliged under the 1986 farm price review proposals; what restrictions have been placed under the agreement on the extent of such national funding; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what estimate he has made of the additional cost to United Kingdom national expenditure of the parts of the 1986 farm price review package which permit national Governments to make extra provision for small cereal producers and for beneficiaries of the milk outgoers scheme and which oblige national Governments to pay a share of the costs of surplus storage and to reduce the interest payments on moneys provided by the Intervention Board for such storage, respectively;

(4) what estimate was made by the Commission of the savings to common agricultural policy costs in 1986 of transferring to member states one quarter of the costs of surplus food storage and of reducing the interest payments made to member states for their interim financing of such storage costs, respectively.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Freeports

Mr. Best asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what tax and duty concessions are available at United Kingdom freeports; what information he has about equivalent concessions available at freeports in the rest of the EEC; what criteria he used in determining the level of concession at United Kingdom freeports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Goods may be imported into United Kingdom freeports, for storage or processing for export, without payment of customs duty, CAP levies or import VAT. I understand that similar concessions are available at freeports in the rest of the EEC under the rules laid down in the Free Zone Directive (69/75/EEC). The level of customs duty and CAP levy concessions in United Kingdom freeports is that permitted under EC legislation. Other concessions are determined under normal national rules which are designed to safeguard the revenue and prevent unfair competition.

United Kingdom Companies (Customs Information)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has about how many United Kingdom companies and individuals have had their details reported to the United States authorities under the combined customs agreement in the years 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985 and to date in 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: It is not the practice of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise to disclose specific case details but under various international Agreements and Conventions Her Majesty's Customs and Excise passed the following items of information to the United States authorities:

	Items of information
June-December 1984	132
January-December 1985	201
January-April 1986	60

The figures for earlier years are not readily available and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Civil Servants (Ethnic Origin)

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish the total costs to date of the survey of the ethnic origin of civil servants.

Mr. Luce: I have been asked to reply.

The information on the costs of these surveys is not kept centrally but when the programme of surveys, announced on 28 January 1985 was being considered by the Government it was estimated that the total cost would be in the region of £375,000.

Balance of Trade

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what effects he estimates the change in the price of oil and measures to correct the United States deficit on trade are likely to have on the balance of payments between the industrial countries; if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the United Kingdom, Germany, Japan and the United States of America his estimate of the likely change in the balance of trade on current account in each case in the event of the United States correcting the imbalance in its trade over the next two years, assuming that the price of oil remains at the present level; and what would be the likely effect in each case on trade in manufactures.

Mr. MacGregor: It is impracticable to provide the detailed estimates requested. The change in the balance of trade resulting from a fall in oil prices and from measures taken to correct the United States trade deficit will depend on a wide variety of factors including how they affect other prices, economic activity and exchange rates, as well as the policies adopted in other countries.

Construction Industry

Mr. Dalyell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received from the British Building Employers' Federation regarding the implications for the level and trend of investment in the construction industry of the phasing out of capital allowances on machinery, plant and industrial buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: None, but I am aware of the views of the Scottish Building Employers' Federation. The chief aims of the Government's business tax strategy are the stimulation of efficiency, enterprise and employment. These are being achieved through the creation of a more even-handed tax system based on significantly lower rates of corporation tax and allowances for depreciation which are more closely linked to useful asset life. As a result, investment decisions in future are less likely to be distorted by purely tax considerations.

Direct Cosmetics Ltd.

Mr. Latham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the cost to public funds to date in (a) legal costs and (b) repaid value added tax of the case of Direct Cosmetics Ltd. v. Commissioners of Customs and Excise; and whether he will instruct Her Majesty's Customs and Excise to withdraw its latest action before the European Court.

Mr. Brooke: (a) The information is not available. (b) Direct Cosmetics has been repaid £26,676·48 VAT. (c) No. I refer my hon. Friend to my reply of 24 February to his letter of 27 January.

Mr. Latham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what response he intends to make to the letter dated 10 April to Her Majesty's Customs and Excise from Mr. W. F. Doddy, managing director of Direct Cosmetics Ltd. of Oakham, regarding the outstanding balance of value added tax legally repayable to the company, following the judgment of the European Court of Justice in the case of Direct Cosmetics Ltd. v. Commissioners of Customs and Excise.

Mr. Brooke: A reply to Mr. Doddy's letter was sent to him by Customs and Excise on 28 April.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the time lag between changes in the exchange rate and changes in the balance of trade in manufactures; what rate of exchange is reflected in trade in manufactures in the first quarter of the current year; what is the cause of the fall in exports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Finance Bill

Dr. Twinn asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if notes on those clauses of the Finance Bill to be taken in Committee of the whole House will be made available to hon. Members.

Mr. MacGregor: Yes. The appropriate notes on clauses were placed in the Vote Office earlier today.

Economic and Finance Council

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the latest meeting of the European Community's Economic and Finance Council.

Mr. Lawson: The ECOFIN Council met in Luxembourg on Monday 28 April. I represented the United Kingdom.

The Council discussed the general budgetary situation of the Community and the pressures on agricultural spending, in the light of the Agriculture Council's decisions of last week on the price fixing and other developments. The Commission drew attention to the dangers of overrunning the 1·4 per cent. VAT ceiling in 1986 and 1987. It was generally recognised by the Council, however, that these spending pressures would have to be contained within the 1·4 per cent. ceiling and that savings would therefore be needed, especially in 1987. I made clear the United Kingdom's view that all Community expenditure should be subject to budget discipline and that finance should govern expenditure in the Community as in national budgets.

The Council met a delegation from the European Parliament led by the President of the Parliament, M. Pflimlin. Several members of the delegation made clear that they recognised the need for budgetary discipline, though they did not endorse certain important aspects of the Council's approach to it. It was agreed that, in accordance with the Council's conclusions of December 1984, the Presidents of the Council, the Parliamet and the Commission should meet to discuss possible procedures for a budget discipline common to all three institutions and that the Parliament would submit its ideas in writing in advance. The delegation from the Parliament declined the Council's invitation to discuss the reference framework for the 1987 Community budget.

The Council concluded its meeting by agreeing unanimously on a reference framework for the 1987 Community budget in accordance with the budgetary discipline conclusions of December 1984. The framework provides for expenditure on agricultural market support and non-obligatory expenditure to be kept within the budget discipline guideline limit and the maximum rate of increase laid down in the Treaty, respectively, while noting that it will be necessary to take account during the budgetary procedure of the European Court's forthcoming judgment on the disputed 1986 budget, the supplementary budget for 1986, the "cost of the past" problem in the structural funds, and enlargement.

Copies of the Council's conclusions on the 1987 reference framework will be placed in the Library as soon as they are received from Brussels.

Tax Allowances

Mr. Frank Field asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what extra revenue would result from allowing all tax allowances, both personal and non-structural, at the standard rate of tax only.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 24 April 1986, c. 226]: The cost at 1986-87 levels of income of allowing personal tax allowances at rates in excess of the basic rate of income tax is estimated to be about £600 million. Information on the similar cost of other income tax reliefs is available only in respect of mortgage interest, retirement annuity premiums and employees' superannuation contributions; in total it is also about £600 million. It is not possible to estimate precisely the combined yield from restricting these reliefs and personal allowances to the basic rate, but it is thought to be about £1,400 million.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he proposes to take in the light of the European Commission's application to the European Court for a ruling to compel the United Kingdom to extend value added tax to new houses, fuel and other items which are currently zero-rated.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 28 April 1986, c. 326]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on Tuesday 4 March 1986 at column 94 to my hon. Friend the Member for Dulwich (Mr. Bowden). The Government's position is unchanged.

Royal Ordnance Companies

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration has been given to tax concessions to be awarded in respect of the royal ordnance companies after the proposed flotation in July 1986.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 30 April 1986, c. 444]: No tax concessions have been sought or authorised.

The tax treatment of Royal Ordnance plc and its operating subsidiaries is and will remain in accordance with the Taxes Acts.

TRANSPORT

Vehicle Registration Prefix

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the bodies which have urged him to set the vehicle licensing date at October each year.

Mr. Michael Spicer: We have received representations from the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders in support of the move to October.

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the savings to be made by the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre as a result of changing the annual vehicle licensing date to October.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Moving the month of change of the vehicle age identification letter to October will produce savings of about £100,000 a year at the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre. In addition, there will be improvements in the level of service provided by the centre for the motoring trade and general public. These were not, however, significant factors in reaching the decision to move to October.

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the change in the number of jobs in the motor dealer operation as a result of altering the annual vehicle licensing date to October.

Mr. Michael Spicer: There is no basis for making such an estimate since the view of a major part of the motor industry has been that October would overall be the most beneficial alternative to the present August change. If the industry as a whole now wants another arrangement, we are prepared to consider it.

Bus Services

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of (a) current Sunday bus services and (b) current bus services after 6 pm on weekdays have been registered in England.

Mr. David Mitchell: This information is not readily available. At this stage only commercially viable services have been registered by operators. To these will be added the services to be provided under contract to local authorities and to passenger transport executives, for which substantial amounts of money are available.

The area studies to be undertaken by the Transport and Road Research Laboratory will cover Sunday and evening services.

Civil Aviation Conference

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he has taken to ensure that the needs of consumers are taken into account at meetings of the European civil aviation conference; and what plans he has to advance the consumer interest during the forthcoming meeting of the European civil aviation conference.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The statement of policy adopted by the European Conference of Civil Aviation last year formally acknowledged the importance of taking the needs of consumers fully into account in its work. The Government are now pressing other ECAC members to agree that appropriate international consumer organisations should be invited to attend ECAC meetings of concern to them.

Driving Licences

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport why the international driving licence is required to contain a photograph of the holder; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: It is a requirement of the international conventions under which international driving permits (IDPs) are issued that they should incorporate a photograph of the holder. The validity of an IDP is limited to 12 months, so difficulties associated with out of date photographs do not generally arise.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, pursuant to the answer of 24 April to the hon. Member for Leicester, East, he will list the practical considerations which militate against the inclusion in driving licences of further personal details, such as place of birth; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I shall answer this question shortly.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the number of people whose driving licence has been withdrawn and who subsequently apply for a new licence from the driver and vehicle licensing centre under an assumed name, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Michael Spicer: None.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has for each of the last five years as to the number of driving licences which were (a) lost, (b) stolen and (c) withdrawn for any reason and as to the number of new licences issued within each of the categories for which new licence may be issued.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have no information about the number of licences (a) lost, (b) stolen or (c) withdrawn for other than medical reasons. In 1984 and 1985, respectively, 5,445 and 6,065 licences were withdrawn for medical reasons.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 24 April in respect of replacement and duplicate licence. In addition, the following numbers of "exchange" licences were issued:

	Number
1985	992,589
1984	939,603
1983	*529,100
1982	156,127
1981	114,376

* Change in criterion for "exchange" licence during this year—drivers who pass test and claim a full licence regarded as "exchange" applicants from 1983.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to which European Economic Community countries require a driving licence to include a photograph of the holder; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: All except Great Britain, British Forces Germany and the Republic of Ireland. Omission of a photograph is permitted under annex I of Council directive 80/1263.

A5 (Traffic Flow)

Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Transport what recent surveys have been carried out on the volume of traffic flowing along the A5 between Muckley corner and Churchbridge in Staffordshire; and if he will publish the results.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The most recent surveys were carried out in March and October 1985. The 24-hour average weekday flow at a point midway between Muckley corner and the A5/A52 junction was 12,663 vehicles (March 1985). At a point half a mile east of Churchbridge it was 21,251 vehicles (October 1985).

M6 North Orbital Route

Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many members of the public responded to the public consultation concerning the proposed M6 north orbital route; and what was the relative support each proposed option received.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: About 40,000 consultation documents were distributed covering the whole route. Some 6,300 questionnaires were returned. In addition, several hundred letters were received together with petitions containing nearly 11,000 signatures.

No clear ranking order emerged for the Essington to Bassetts Pole section; the marginal balance of opinion favoured an outer route following the general line of A5/A38 — rather than a fresh intrusion into open countryside. Additionally in this corridor a small majority endorsed the Chasewater variation. For the Bassetts Pole to Coleshill section 80 per cent. of the responses favoured the yellow route.

Compulsory Purchase

Mr. Richard Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of times, in each of the last five years, that his Department has acquired the main residence of an individual by a compulsory purchase order, the number of cases, in each of the last five years, referred to the Lands Tribunal, and the average length of time taken to complete an acquisition.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 25 March 1986, c. 418]: The following figures relate to dwellings acquired directly under compulsory purchase orders and to dwellings liable to be purchased compulsorily which owners have required the Department to acquire in advance under the planning blight procedures.

	Compulsory Purchase Orders	Planning Blight	References to the Lands Tribunal
1981-82	85	244	—
1982-83	97	182	—
1983-84	32	172	2
1984-85	47	203	1
1985-86	70	111	2

THE ARTS

Jubilee Gardens

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts if he will publish the scale of charges for the use of Jubilee Gardens; and if he was consulted over the charges to be made.

Mr. Luce: The basic charges for the Jubilee Gardens are as scheduled. I was not consulted, and would not expect to be consulted, on a matter which it is entirely for the South Bank Board to settle.

	per hour
(1) Events
Up to 1,000 persons	£50
1,000 up to 5,000	£75
5,000 plus	£150
(2) Filming
Features	£150
Television and other filming including news, educational, training etc.	£50
(3) Photography	£30

Additional charges are made for other services.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts when the London Residuary Body finalised the terms of the agency agreement with the South Bank board for Jubilee Gardens.

Mr. Luce: The South Bank Board expects to finalise the agreement with the London Residuary Body very shortly. In the meantime the area is being managed by the board on the basis of an exchange of letters with the London Residuary Body.

ENVIRONMENT

Rates

Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the total rates rise in poundage and percentage terms for domestic ratepayers in every local authority in England in 1986-87 as compared with 1985-86, ranked from the largest increase to the smallest; and if he will further list the political control of each authority concerned.

Mrs. Rumbold: I have today placed the available information in the Library.

Asbestos

Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if financial provision will be granted to local authorities for programmes for the removal of asbestos; if grants will be made available to owner occupiers for the safe removal of asbestos; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend will take into account the financial implications for local authorities of asbestos removal when he determines the level of provision and aggregate Exchequer grant in the 1987-88 rate support grant settlement. For owner-occupiers, grants may be available for the removal of asbestos if the work forms part of a larger scheme of improvement or repair work which is eligible for grant.

Anglian Water Authority

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the number of chemical and food processing companies which utilise the water supplies administered by the Anglian water authority.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not available centrally.

Council House Sales (Moneylenders)

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about the incidence of moneylenders raising false anxieties in the minds of elderly council tenants concerning their future security of tenure, as an inducement to those tenants to exercise their right to buy, on the basis of a loan agreement under which the lender succeeds to the title to the property on the tenant's death; if he has any plans to introduce legislation to make this practice a specific criminal offence; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I am not aware of such practices, but would naturally deplore them. Any information which my hon. Friend can provide will be carefully considered.

Ex-GLC Staff

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has directed the London Residuary Body to ensure that all ex-Greater London council staff receive their outstanding payments before the end of April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: No. The Residuary Body has to fulfil its statutory duty to validate claims before payments are made. It is, however, aware of the desirability of making payments as early as possible, and is intending to do so.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his current estimate of the total number of ex-Greater London council staff who became redundant on 1 April.

Mr. Tracey: It is still too early to provide such an estimate, but I understand that the London Residuary Body has received some 3,200 claims for redundancy payments or compensation arising from abolition.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will detail the immediate past employment or current employment of members of the London Residuary Body.

Mr. Tracey: The information is as follows:

Member	Present or former profession (on appointment)
Sir Godfrey Taylor	Formerly Chairman, Southern Water Authority
Mr. Alan Blakemore CBE	Formerly Town Clerk and Chief Executive, London Borough of Croydon
Mr. Jack Esling	Formerly General Manager, Personnel, Thames Water Authority
Mr. Wallace Mackenzie OBE	Group Managing Director, Slough Estates, plc
Mr. Michael Roberts	Partner, Deloitte, Haskins and Sells, Chartered Accountants
Mr. Jack Wolkind CBE	Formerly Chief Executive, London Borough of Tower Hamlets
Councillor Peter Bowness	Solicitor; Leader of the Council, London borough of Croydon

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when Ministers last met the chairman of the London Residuary Body; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Tracey: My right hon. Friend, and my noble Friend the Minister of State, met the chairman on 24 April to discuss matters relevant to the Residuary Body's functions under the Local Government Act 1985.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish individual salaries or fees, expenses and contractual conditions enjoyed by the current members of the London Residuary Body.

Mr. Tracey: The information as to current remuneration is as follows:

Members	Remuneration to be paid (per annum) £
Sir Godfrey Taylor (Chairman)	50,000
Alan Blakemore CBE	12,000
Jack Esling	24,000
Wallace Mackenzie OBE	12,000
Jack Wolkind CBE	12,000
Michael Roberts	18,000
Councillor Peter Bowness (Co-ordinating Committee Member)	6,000

Remuneration for the chairman is on a full-time basis; for Mr. Esling on the basis of four days a week; Mr. Roberts three; Messrs Blakemore, Mackenzie and Wolkind two; and Councillor Bowness one. Remuneration is subject to abatement, if applicable, in respect of public sector pensions received. The provisions governing appointments are given in schedule 13 to the Local Government Act 1985. It would not be appropriate for me to disclose individual terms of appointment.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the number, grades and cost of staff currently employed in his Department on matters connected with the abolition of the Greater London council and the work of the London Residuary Body.

Mr. Tracey: Much of the Department's work on matters connected with the abolition of the Greater London Council and the work of the London Residuary Body is handled by staff within the appropriate policy areas and is not separately identifiable.

A central capacity is being retained to co-ordinate work on implementation of the Local Government Act 1985, but it is not possible to divide staff effort between each metropolitan area. Details of staff currently working wholly on abolition in this central unit are as follows:

Grade	Number
Grade 5	3
Grade 7	4
Higher Executive Officer/HEO(D)	5
Executive Officer	5
Clerical Officer	3
Clerical Assistant	1
Personal Secretary	3

The estimated cost, including accommodation, of employing these staff for a full year would be £0·6 million (1985 prices), but the numbers are kept under review.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish details of the property inherited by the London Residuary Body from the Greater London council.

Mr. Tracey: At abolition, the majority of property was transferred to successor authorities or to the Residuary Body by orders made under the Local Government Act 1985, according to general descriptions which defined the purpose for which property was held by the abolished councils. Certain individual properties were transferred to the London Residuary Body by means of specific references in the orders. Some property may have fallen outside the scope of the orders, in which case it will have vested in the residuary bodies by virtue of section 62 of the Act. For the most part, my right hon. Friend does not therefore have details of the individual properties inherited by the London Residuary Body.

GLC Properties (Sale)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whom he is consulting on the setting up of a trust fund arising from the sale of Greater London Council properties.

Mr. Tracey: The period during which consultation took place about setting up the Trust for London ended on 31 January 1986. Views were sought from the London Boroughs Association, Association of London Authorities, Inner London Education Authority, London Co-ordinating Committee, London Residuary Body, Foundations Forum, Charitable Trusts Administrators Group, Charities Aid Foundation, Business in the Community, London Voluntary Services Council, National Council of Voluntary Organisations, and the Commission for Racial Equality. Comments received favoured the proposal to create the trust.

London Marathon

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of past support given by Her Majesty's Government to the London marathon board.

Mr. Tracey: The Government has given broad support and encouragement to the London marathon. For example, the organisers have been given each year the use of a substantial part of Greenwich park to begin the race (together with parking spaces for competitors' equipment coaches, marquees, refreshment vehicles, public address systems and refuse skips) and the use of routes in St. James's park, namely, The Mall and Birdcage Walk; my Department has assisted the London marathon board in the relocation of its headquarters to Richmond Gate Lodge.

GLC (Abolition)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the 1984 basis upon which the estimated £50 million of savings following abolition of the Greater London council was made.

Mr. Tracey: The basis of the 1984 estimate was set out in my right hon. Friend's answer of 30 November 1984 to me, at column 611.

Monkton House, Sussex

Mr. St. John-Stevas asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps English Heritage is taking to secure the future of Monkton house, Sussex.

Mr. Tracey: The Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission was prepared to purchase Monkton House and open it to the public, provided the necessary funds could be found. A public appeal was launched and an application for grant made to the National Heritage Memorial Fund. The trustees of the NHMF decided against allocating money for this purpose, and on 25 April the HBMC announced that it was unable to proceed with the purchase.

Derelict Land

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the application by Glanford and Scunthorpe borough councils for a derelict land grant to reclaim the old Normanby Park steelworks site.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 28 April 1986, c. 323]: Funds of £1·5 million are available for 1986-87 for the reclamation of the site, which has been accorded rolling programme status. This gives a guarantee of funding for two further years. Discussions are proceeding with the Glanford and Scunthorpe joint committee for the reclamation of Normanby Park steelworks on a works programme.

WALES

Mentally Handicapped People

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy, when considering appeals against planning decisions relative to the provisions of small community-based homes for mentally handicapped people, to take into account the objectives of the all-Wales strategy for mentally handicapped people.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Each appeal is decided on its planning merits and with all material considerations being taken into account.

Full weight is given to the all Wales strategy for mentally handicapped people in considering planning appeals for which it is a material consideration. I take this opportunity to underline the advice given in development control policy note 15 that homes for the mentally handicapped should be part of the community and should allow the occupants to enjoy normal community life, so far as their handicaps permit.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy, when considering appeals against planning decisions relative to the provision of small community-based homes for mentally handicapped people not to withhold planning consent for such residential units involving the provisions of support services if planning consent could be given, or already exists, for residential purposes for non-handicapped people.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Each planning appeal is considered on its merits. The Secretary of State and his inspectors have regard to all material considerations when considering appeals.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take steps to remove the requirement for a change of use certificate to be issued for a residential house or flat if the occupiers of such premises are to be mentally handicapped persons requiring support services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for the Environment are reviewing the Town and Country Planning (Use Classes) Order 1972 and have before them a report produced by a sub-group of the Department of the Environment's property advisory group. One of the sub-group's recommendations is the creation of a new residential use class which would provide for the special type of use of a house by a group of not more than 10 people living together and enjoying the services of non-resident and resident supervisory or domestic staff. The report has been the subject of widespread consultation and the responses are now being considered.

Examination Statistics

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many young people in Wales took (a) general certificate of education O-levels, (b) certificate of secondary education examinations and (c) both sets of examinations in 1985; and of these groups what is his best estimate of the number who did not return to school in the September term.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: It is provisionally estimated that in the academic year 1984-85, 31,400 school leavers had attempted at least one GCE O-level examination, 31,300 had attempted a CSE examination and 24,300 had attempted one examination of each type.

Comparable data estimates for pupils who left school in their minimum school leaving age year were 17,800, 22,700 and 16,100, respectively.

School Leavers

Mr. Frank Field asked the secretary of State for Wales how many young people in Wales at (a) the minimum school leaving age, (b) one year above and (c) two years above minimum school leaving age left school in 1985; and of these groups what is his best estimate of the number who (a) were eligible to leave at the end of the Easter term and (b) did leave at the end of the Easter term.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: It is provisionally estimated that 44,300 pupils left maintained and independent schools in Wales in 1984-85. Of these, 29,400 left in the year of attaining the minimum school leaving age, 6,100 left one year beyond the minimum school leaving age and 7,400 left two years beyond the minimum school leaving age.

It is estimated that about 18,000 of those attaining the minimum school leaving age in 1984-85 were eligible to leave at the end of the spring term, and that about 3,000 did so. Pupils over the minimum school leaving age may leave at any time.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fishing Industry

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the number of fishing vessels laid up, the number of new vessels introduced, the number fishing and the number of fishermen employed in the English fishing industry for each of the years 1976 to 1985.

Mr. Gummer: Not all the information requested is available. The following are the details on the English and Welsh fishing fleet for which information is available:

	*Vessels laid up	New vessels†	Total number of vessels	Number of fishermen‡
				Regularly employed	Partially employed
1976	—	74	3,832	8,730	4,149

* Vessels laid up with decommissioning grants under the Fishing Vessels (Financial Assistance) Scheme 1983.

† Vessels constructed with grants from the Herring Industry Board, White Fish Authority or Sea Fish Industry Authority.

‡ As at 31 December of each year — figures taken from "Sea Fisheries Statistical Tables."

Fish

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the annual sum devoted to the promotion of fish as a food for each year from 1980 to 1985.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested is as follows:

	£ million
1980-81	0·273
1981-82	0·310
1982-83	0·669
1983-84	1·059
1984-85	2·784
1985-86	5·267

These figures represent funds allocated for fish promotion by the Sea Fish Industry Authority and its predecessors and include part of the Government's contribution towards the seafish industry development programme which commenced in 1984.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Deakins asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the impact of recent currency revaluations in the European monetary system on the costs of the common agricultural policy and on the 1986 price proposals of the EEC Commission.

Mr. Gummer: The realignment of the European monetary system on 6 April did not give rise to any changes to the agricultural conversion rates ("green rates") used in the CAP. Support prices to farmers have, as a result, been unaffected. The Commission services have suggested that the effect of the realignment will be to increase expenditure by 333 mecu in 1986 as a result of the changes in parities and effects on trade including the introduction of monetary compensatory amounts for France and the Irish Republic. The realignment provides increased scope for devaluations in green rates. Such devaluations would add to the cost of the CAP.

Cereal Production

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the proportion of output of cereals produced in 1985 on holdings with 50 hectares or more of cereals.

Mrs. Fenner: Information on the proportion of cereal output produced in 1985 by holdings with 50 hectares or more of cereals is not readily available and could be extracted only at disproportionate cost. The proportion of the area of cereals accounted for by holdings with 50 hectares or more of cereals is shown in table 4 of the White Paper on the "annual review of agriculture 1986" (Cmnd. 9708).

Wild Salmon and Trout

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research work he is funding or intending to fund on the incidence of skeletal abnormalities in wild salmon and trout.

Mr. Gummer: There are at present no plans to include such work in the programme of research funded by Fisheries Departments.

Surpluses (Price Fixing)

Mr. Marlow asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, assuming similar weather patterns in 1986 to 1985, what estimate he has made of the effect, in volume and value terms, by commodity, of the latest common agricultural policy price fixing on surpluses.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Norway (Salmon Conservation)

Mr. Onslow asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information is available to him concerning the salmon conservation policies of the Norwegian Government, with particular reference to drift netting and the use of monofilament nets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 21 April 1986, c. 41]: I understand that the Norwegian Government recently announced their intention to prohibit the use of monofilament materials in salmon fishing gear from 1988 and to prohibit drift netting for salmon in Norwegian waters from 1989. Other forms of netting will continue to be permitted.

Agricultural Expenditure

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate was made by the Commission of the savings to common agricultural policy costs in 1986 of transferring to member states one quarter of the costs of surplus food storage and of reducing the interest payments made to member states for their interim financing of such storage costs, respectively.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 1 May 1986, c. 476]: The Commission has estimated that the reductions agreed by the Council in payments for intervention storage and financing will reduce Community expenditure by 208 mecu and 92 mecu respectively in 1986.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate has been made by the Commission of the cost of the European Economic Community's agricultural activities in 1986 in consequence of the 1986 price review; what was the figure for 1985; and what is the level of expenditure permitted under the strict budgetary controls agreed in December 1984, disregarding the factor of any allowances which can be made under this agreement for exceptional or aberrant circumstances.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 1 May 1986, c. 476]: The Commission has estimated that in 1986 expenditure relating to agricultural support, for which there is provision of 21,012 mecu in the budget, will be reduced by 320 mecu as a result of the prices agreement. Also the Council at the same time agreed economy measures which should save 300 mecu on the funding of intervention stocks. The Commission has stated, however, that these savings will be outweighed by the effects of currency changes and that a supplementary budget will therefore be required, although it is unclear what extra level of provision will be sought. Guarantee section expenditure in 1985, excluding fisheries, was 19,728 mecu. The maximum level of expenditure in 1986 indicated by the financial guideline, including provision for Spain and Portugal, is 21,186 mecu.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate has been made of the additional cost to United Kingdom national expenditure of the parts of the 1986 farm price review package which permit national Governments to make extra provision for small cereal producers and for beneficiaries of the milk outgoers scheme and which oblige national Governments to pay a share of the costs of surplus storage and to reduce the interest payments on moneys provided by the Intervention Board for such storage, respectively.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 1 May 1986, c. 476]: The aid for small cereal producers agreed as part of the 1986 farm price package will be fully funded from the Community budget. It is too early to say whether any national topping up of the Community payments under the Community milk quota buy-up scheme will be necessary.

The decision to reduce Community reimbursement of financing and technical costs of intervention storage is expected to be broadly neutral in terms of United Kingdom Exchequer expenditure, as the reduction in United Kingdom receipts will be offset by lower contributions to the Community budget.

DEFENCE

Territorial Army

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest figure for recruitment during the previous six months to the Territorial Army of people under 25 years (a) nationally and (b) on Merseyside; and what were the comparable figures for the last three years.

Mr. Lee: During the six months ending 31 March 1986 there were 10,301 recruits to the Territorial Army, nationally, under the age of 25 years. The corresponding figure for Merseyside was 438.

The comparable figures for the last three financial/training years are as follows:

Year	Nationally	Merseyside
1983-84	15,344	879
1984-85	18,455	845
1985-86	17,476	685

Plastic Bullets

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many animals of what types have been used to test the effects of plastic bullet impacts; and what was the fate of these animals.

Mr. Lee: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 21 February 1984 at column 501. Tests were carried out at the Chemical Defence Establishment, Porton Down, prior to the introduction into service of rubber and plastic baton rounds to ensure that the rules governing their use were such as to minimise the risk of injury. Since then further work has been undertaken to improve the medical knowledge and treatment of non-penetrating injuries, including those caused by plastic baton rounds and similar projectiles. In the five-year period from 1980 to 1984, 172 animals were used in this work, the species involved being mainly sheep and pigs. All animals used are deeply anaesthetised and most are painlessly killed while still under anaesthetic.

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Defence from what suppliers his Department procures plastic bullets for the use of the Army and British police forces.

Mr. Lee: The Ministry of Defence procures plastic baton rounds from various commercial sources within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many plastic bullets were fired by the Army in Northern Ireland in 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Stanley: No separate statistics for the Army are available for the period before March 1981. Since March 1981 the numbers of plastic baton rounds fired by the Army were as follows:

	Rounds
1981*	9,836
1982	154
1983	116
1984	265
1985	266

* March to December.

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether there has been any change in the kinetic energy figures for standard baton rounds since the answer of 21 January 1977, Official Report, columns 329-30 ; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: No.

ARWEN 37

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Defence what are the weight, material, dimensions and muzzle velocity fired from ARWEN 37; and what are their kinetic energy levels at five yards, 15 yds, 25 yds and 50 yds.

Mr. John Lee: The Ministry of Defence has no requirement for the ARWEN 37 anti-riot system, and the information requested is therefore not available.

Tanks

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce the placing of orders for tanks for the Army; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have nothing to add to my reply on 11 February 1986, at column 767. I wrote to the hon. Member on the subject on 25 April 1986.

Binary Nerve Gas Weapons

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Defence what consultation the Government will be undertaking prior to final consideration of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation force goal of modernising the United States' binary nerve gas weapons.

Mr. Stanley: Consultation on this force goal is taking place collectively within NATO in accordance with normal Alliance procedures. As I said in the House on 28 April, at column 665, this force goal has been considered by military representatives at NATO; it has not yet been considered by the NATO ambassadors or by NATO Ministers.

Royal Ordnance Small Arms Ltd.

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Defence why he is not prepared to place his Department's total 1986-87 small arms ammunition requirement with Royal Ordnance Small Arms Ltd.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Department is at present in negotiation with Royal Ordnance plc over our unplaced small arms ammunition orders for 1986-87.

Ammunition (Purchases)

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the final percentage of small arms ammunition purchased abroad in 1985-86.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It would not be appropriate to disclose the final percentage because, taken together with other published information, it would indicate our total small arms ammunition requirements. I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 4 March 1986 at column 127.

Major Cory

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether Her Majesty's Government have anything to add to the statement made in the House by Mr. James Ramsden, the then Secretary of State for War, on 17 December 1963 concerning the circumstances of the court martial of Major Cory and the subsequent events up to the hearing of his appeal by the court martial appeal court.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The facts of this case have been studied as fully as possible after a period of 25 years. There is no reason to suppose that Major Cory is anything other than totally innocent of the charges made against him. This was demonstrated at the time by the quashing of his conviction by the courts martial appeal court on the grounds that there had been a miscarriage of justice.

Libyan Attack (United Kingdom Bases)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he first reached the conclusion that the military assessment and intelligence evidence provided to Her Majesty's Government by the United States Administration justified the use of United Kingdom bases for the launching of an attack on Libya; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: The background to the decision, and my right hon. Friend's participation in it, to allow the use of bases in the United Kingdom for the operation against Libya on the night of 14-15 April was set out in statements and answers to the House by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 15 April at columns 729-39 and 16 April at columns 875-81.

Small Arms Ammunition

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list his Department's 5·56 mm., 7·62 mm. and 9·00 mm. small arms ammunition requirement for 1986-87.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have nothing to add to my answer of 4 March at column 127.

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of 7·62 mm. small arms ammunition his Department intends to purchase from Royal Ordnance Small Arms Limited.

Mr. Norman Lamont: This will depend upon a range of considerations, not the least of which is the value for money on offer.

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he wishes to retain in the United Kingdom a strategic capacity in 5·56 mm, 7·62 mm and 9·00 mm small arms ammunition.

Mr. Norman Lamont: There are at present no plans to relinquish indigenous manufacturing capability for small arms ammunition natures.

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will name the British companies which are currently supplying the British armed forces with small arms.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The following British companies are currently supplying the British armed forces with small arms:

RO plc
Accuracy International
Hull Cartridge Company

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the British companies which are currently producing a 5·56 mm and 7·62 mm small arms ammunition for the British armed forces.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Royal Ordnance plc is the only British company at present manufacturing these natures.

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of his Department's small arms ammunition requirement he intends to place overseas in 1986-87, 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Norman Lamont: As I stated in the House on 30 January at columns 1180-81 it is our policy to increase the proportion of the ammunition programme put to competition. This does not, however, imply an intention to place orders overseas rather than in the United Kingdom. The volume of orders awarded to overseas companies will be decided in the light of the relative merits of the tenders received.

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Defence what supportive measures his Department proposes to allow British small arms ammunition manufacturers to compete in countries from which his Department purchases small arms ammunition but do not allow British small arms ammunition manufacturers to compete.

Mr. Norman Lamont: We are prepared to discuss particular problems drawn to our attention by British small arms manufacturers. It is, however, for other countries to determine for themselves the source from which they purchase their small arms.

"Statement on the Defence Estimates 1986"

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to publish the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1986".

Mr. Younger: I intend to publish this year's "Statement on the Defence Estimates" on Monday 12 May.

Royal Ordnance Factories

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Defence how he will satisfy himself that foreigners do not exceed their quota of 15 per cent. of Royal Ordnance shares by way of holding companies.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 28 April 1986, c. 332]: Any quota established would be embodied in the company's articles of association. At flotation, measures would be in force to enable strict vetting of share applications to be applied. Thereafter I am satisfied that the provisions of the Companies Act and the company's articles of association would apply to protect the quota.

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the name of the consultants preparing the sale of the royal ordnance factories; and what safeguards he has asked for relating to the sale of royal ordnance factories to non-British shareholders.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 28 April 1986, c. 332]: The consultants engaged on the privatisation of Royal Ordnance plc are as follows:

Lazard Brothers and Company Ltd. — Merchant bank advisers to royal ordnance.

Cazenove and Company/Kleinwort Grieveson and Company —joint brokers to royal ordnance.

Coward Chance—Solicitors to royal ordnance.

Coopers and Lybrand—reporting accountants to the MOD and RO.

Grandfield Rork Collins Financial — financial public relations consultants to the Ministry of Defence and royal ordnance.

N. M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd.—Merchant bank advisers to Her Majesty's Government.

Hoare Govett Ltd.—Brokers to the Ministry of Defence.

Herbert Smith and Co. — Solicitors to the Ministry of Defence.

Greenaway Harrison Ltd.—Printers.

The Government have given an undertaking that Royal Ordnance will not be allowed to fall under foreign control. It is envisaged that this will be achieved by amending the articles of association appropriately before flotation to limit the proportion of shares held by foreigners and by creating a special share held by the Government to ensure that the position is not changed. No final decisions have, however, yet been taken on the precise mechanics.

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the royal ordnance factories which (a) have and (b) have not been offered guaranteed contracts in 1986-87.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 28 April 1986, c. 332]: The following royal ordnance factories have been offered contracts since 1 April 1986: Chorley, Blackburn, Patricroft, Enfield, Radway Green, Westcott, Bridgwater and Bishopton.

Small Arms and Ammunition

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Defence what are the sizes, numbers and names of foreign manufacturers who have supplied small arms ammunition to the United Kingdom in 1986-87 to date.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 30 April 1986, c. 422]: Deliveries to the MOD from foreign manufacturers since 1 April 1986 have been as follows:

Manufacturers	Size	Number supplied (millions)
Greek Powder & Cartridge Company	·50 inch	0·7
FFV Sweden	9 mm	2

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to curtail the placement of small arms and ammunition contracts abroad.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 30 April 1986, c. 422]: Procurement of small arms and ammunition is conducted within our general policy of purchasing from overseas only when the advantages of cost, performance and time scale outweigh the longer term benefits of procuring the British alternative: no additional curtailments are planned. In accordance with this policy, it has been decided that competition for the prime contractor for the second production order for SA-80, the dominant element of our future small arms programme, will be confined to United Kingdom companies.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Higher Education (Expenditure)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the change in real terms in expenditure on (a) universities, (b) polytechnics and (c) other institutions of higher education in each year since 1979; and what are the projected changes in real terms for 1986-87 and each successive year for which figures are available.

Mr. Walden: Table A sets out, for the years 1979-80 to 1984-85, information on the public expenditure concerned. The expenditure figures are at 1984-85 prices, calculated using the GDP deflator.

For universities, the grant figures include recurrent and capital grants made by the University Grants Committee and the Computer Board to universities in Great Britain, together with the grants made by the Department of Education and Science to the Open University. The recurrent and capital figures for polytechnics are for local education authority expenditure on polytechnics in England. The recurrent and capital figures for other major establishments are for local authority expenditure in England; these figures include spending on non-advanced further education provided in the institutions concerned. The grant figure for grant-aided colleges is for DES grant to colleges in England. In each case information on public expenditure on student tuition fees is also included. The fees totals shown relate only to home students.

Table B shows provisional outturn figures at 1984-85 prices for universities and grant-aided colleges for 1985-86; the corresponding figures for polytechnics and other major establishments are not yet available. The table also shows available information for 1986-87 and future years; local authority expenditure is excluded because it cannot readily be split between polytechnics and other institutions and because decisions for 1987-88 and 1988-89 remain to be taken.

Precise figures on fees are not yet available for 1986-87 and following years.

Table A — Expenditure in Further and Higher Education — £ million at 1984-85 prices

Notes:

(1) Figures for universities include the additional funds provided by the Government for redundancy and premature retirement costs. The figures also reflect the progressive withdrawal since 1980 of the overseas student subsidy, and a number of funding changes which mean that the figures are not necessarily comparable from year to year.

(2) The figures do not include funding from the research councils for fees or research.

(3) Recurrent figures included for polytechnics and other major establishments do not include catering and residence expenditure.

Teachers' Pension Fund

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will detail the present surpluses on the teachers' pension fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: There is no teachers' superannuation fund and consequently there are no cash surpluses. Teachers' and employers' contributions are paid into the Consolidated Fund and benefits are paid out of money voted by Parliament. An account is maintained of receipts and payments. The balance in the account and any excess of receipts over payments each year are deemed to be invested in Government securities and interest added accordingly to the account. The Government Actuary values the account every five years. If he considers it insufficient to meet accrued liabilities, he may set a supplementary contribution rate, payable by the employers over and above normal contributions by employers and employees. The present supplementary rate is 1·75 per cent.

I have arranged for a copy of the most recently available audited account (1984-85) to be placed in the Library.

School Closures

Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list by education authority the schools in each authority which have been closed and are currently awaiting disposal, indicating where appropriate the use to which the buildings or the land are to be put.

Mr. Dunn: This information is not available centrally.

Anti-drug Abuse Video

Mr. Bendall asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will seek to make the Grange Hill anti-drug abuse video "Just Say No" available for screening in all schools.

Mr. Dunn: This is an admirable and timely initiative on the part of the BBC and I am sure that it will be very successful: indeed the success already of the associated pop record is a sure indication that this is so. The choice of material to be used in schools is a matter for the schools themselves and their local education authorities, but I am sure that they would want to consider this material along with the other good offerings which are available in the field.

Free School Meals

Mr. Pendry asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the 30 local authorities in England which are restricting the provision of free school meals to those pupils whose parents are in receipt of supplementary benefit or family income supplement.

Mr. Dunn: The LEAs which, at October 1985, restricted the provision of free school meals to children of families claiming supplementary benefit or family income supplement are as follows:

Bromley
Enfield
Hounslow
Kingston upon Thames
Merton
Redbridge
Sutton
Solihull
Trafford
Wakefield
Isles of Scilly
Bedfordshire
Berkshire
Buckinghamshire
Cheshire*
Cornwall
Dorset
Essex
Gloucestershire
Kent
Lincolnshire
Norfolk
Northumberland
Shropshire
Staffordshire
Suffolk
Surrey
Warwickshire
West Sussex†

† Discretion exercised for special school pupils on 1979 Income Scales only.

Members' Correspondence

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill about correspondence from Margaret Reilly and David G. Sutherland, which his Department acknowledged on 19 March.

Mr. Walden: I wrote to the hon. Member today.

PRIME MINISTER

Libya

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister whether she will publish in the Official Report the list of targets in Libya bombed by planes stationed in Britain, the objective in each case and the degree of success achieved.

The Prime Minister: The Pentagon has issued a full list of the targets selected for attack in the operation against Libya. The five targets were:

1. The Aziziyah barracks in Tripoli
2. The Al Jamahiriyah barracks in Benghazi
3. The Sidi Balal port facility
4. Tripoli military airfield
5. Benina military airfield

F111s from bases in the United Kingdom attacked those targets in the Tripoli area. The objective was to strike clearly defined targets demonstrably involved in the conduct and support of terrorist activities. We understand that this was broadly achieved.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Prime Minister if she will specify the numbers and types of all American aircraft used from United Kingdom bases in connection with the United States raid on Libya.

The Prime Minister: As has been said on previous occasions, the type of aircraft, other than tankers, deployed from United Kingdom bases for this purpose was the F111. The detailed operational arrangements were for the United States within the strict criteria set down for the selection of targets.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister what is the latest estimate of the number of terrorists killed during the United States attack on Libya from United Kingdom bases.

The Prime Minister: The United States made clear its intention was to attack clearly defined targets related to terrorism. The United States Government have stated that all five targets were successfully attacked. Aircraft from bases in Britain were involved in attacks in the Tripoli area only. We do not have a detailed breakdown of the casualties incurred.

Terrorism

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister whether she will write to each United States Senator who voted against the extradition of alleged Irish Republican Army terrorists, urging them to drop their opposition to the measures before Congress as part of the worldwide campaign against terrorism.

The Prime Minister: My views on this matter are well known in the United States.

ENERGY

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Energy what arrangements are currently made for disposing of waste from the reprocessing of nuclear fuel from overseas; if any plans exist to extend these facilities either on the same or at a different site; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Since 1976 BNFL's contracts for the reprocessing of overseas spent fuel have contained options for the return of wastes. The Government intend that reprocessing contracts with overseas customers should continue to contain such options, that the options should be exercised and that the wastes should be returned. It is already planned to return all high level wastes as soon as practicable after vitrification, but in respect of some of the less radioactive wastes there may be other options worthy of study—for example, whether it would be sensible to substitute an equivalent quantity, in radiological terms, of higher level wastes.

Low level waste which has already arisen under BNFL's pre-1976 contracts has been disposed of at Drigg: high level waste and intermediate level waste is in storage pending further processing before final disposal in the United Kingdom. Wastes arising in future under these contracts will similarly be disposed of in accordance with our national waste strategy. All wastes arising under the pre-1976 overseas contracts will represent no more than 10 per cent. of total wastes arising in the United Kingdom by 2000. No facilities in addition to those needed for the disposal of United Kingdom waste should be required.

NCB (Enterprise) Ltd.

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will publish in the Official Report the names of all persons working full-time for National Coal Board (Enterprise) Ltd.; and what are their qualifications.

Mr. David Hunt: This is a matter for the management of the company.

British Coal

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to seek to change the name of the National Coal Board to British Coal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: In due course, when a convenient opportunity occurs, my right hon. Friend intends to introduce legislation to bring the statutory name of the National Coal Board into line with its new trading name of British Coal.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Scottish Grand Committee

Mrs. McCurley asked the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, how many House of Commons Staff are transported from London solely for the purpose of Scottish Grand Committee meetings in Edinburgh; and what is the cost of this.

Mr. Beith: Seven staff, comprising one Clerk, one Doorkeeper and five staff of the Department of the Official Report, normally attend Scottish Grand Committee meetings in Edinburgh. In the case of the meeting on 20 January 1986, the cost of travel, subsistence and staff travelling time/overtime amounted to £2,250.

Mrs. McCurley asked the Lord Privy Seal what is the additional cost of transporting Ministers and Members of Parliament to Edinburgh solely for the purpose of meetings of the Scottish Grand Committee.

Mr. Biffen: It is difficult to establish with certainty, the additional cost to the public purse of transporting Members of Parliament to Edinburgh solely for the purpose of meetings of the Scottish Grand Committee. Such costs may be included, but not separately identified, in Members' routine car allowance claims and rail and air warrant costs relating to weekend visits to their constituencies and homes in Scotland.

The costs to date of transporting Members of Parliament which have been identified as directly attributable to the meeting of the Committee held in Edinburgh on Monday 20 January 1986 amount to £1,350.

There is no additional cost for transporting Ministers as meetings of the Scottish Grand Committee are usually arranged on Mondays and Ministers will invariably be up in Scotland for the weekend: all they do is delay their return to London.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Australian Mining Companies (Investment)

Mr. Frank Field asked the hon. Member for Wokingham, as representing the Church Commissioners, of he will list those companies in which the Church Commissioners invest which operate in Australian mining.

Sir William van Straubenzee: The Commissioners invest in the following companies which operate in Australian mining:

Boral
Broken Hill Proprietary
CSR
Comalco
MIM
Western Mining
Exxon
Newmont Mining
British Petroleum
Costain
Shell Transport and Trading

ENVIRONMENT

Housing Waiting Lists

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the impact on local authority housing waiting lists of the rehousing of some National Health Service staff as a result of the implementation of his Department's circular HC(85)19

Sir George Young: Circular HC(85)19, issued by DHSS, concerns the rationalisation of the National Health Service's residential accommodation and disposal of empty property. Anyone required to move will be offered suitable alternative accommodation. There should therefore be no impact on local authority waiting lists. I refer to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services' answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Erith and Crayford (Mr. Evennett) on April 25 at column 263.

Water Authorities

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what statutory and other Government financial controls on the activities of water authorities will cease to apply when such authorities are privatised; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The statutory framework for the privatised water authorities will be set by the legislation which the Government intend to introduce at the earliest opportunity. The Government's intention is to turn the water authorities into water service public limited companies (WSPLCs) which will be subject to the provisions of the Companies Acts. As with other privatised bodies, the water authorities will not after privatisation be subject to the financial controls which apply to public sector bodies.

Development Corporations (Housing)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the current status of discussions relating to the housing owned by each of the development corporations, indicating the degree of tenant involvement in the discussions.

Mr. John Patten: Housing is currently owned by development corporations in Milton Keynes, Peterborough, Runcorn, Telford and Warrington and by the Commission for the New Towns in Basildon. As my hon. Friend the Member for Surbiton (Mr. Tracey) said in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Hawksley) on 25 March, at column 426, the Government are prepared to consider not only transfers to the relevant district councils but also other alternatives which corporations and the commission may wish to put forward. It is now for the these bodies to consider what proposals to submit, but my hon. Friend made clear that one important factor to which we would give weight in assessing these is the views of the tenants.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Seceretary of State for the Environment if there are any plans to re-classify nuclear fuel element cladding, currently defined as intermediate level waste in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give a detailed indication of the estimated costs involved in the decommissioning of a nuclear waste dump; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: There is no intention to decommission a radioactive waste disposal facility.

Pitsford Reservoir and Rutland Water

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is satisfied that the Anglian water authority is in compliance with section 28 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 in respect of its proposals for extending fishing and recreational activities at Pitsford Reservoir and Rutland water, both sites of special scientific interest notified under the Wildlife and Countryside Acts 1981 to 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr Waldegrave: I understand that one of the water authority's activities on Pitsford reservoir is defined as a potentially damaging operation under the terms of the notification as a site of special scientific interest. This and the water authority's other proposals are currently the subject of discussions between the authority and the Nature Conservancy Council.

London Docklands Development Corporation (Poster Campaign)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the cost of the London Docklands Development Corporation's current poster campaign depicting Mr. Ken Livingstone.

Sir George Young: LDDC's poster campaign depicting Mr. Ken Livingstone cost £5,475.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer of 21 April, Official Report, column 65,concerning meetings between his officials and the London Residuary Body, if he will give the date and the agenda for the most recent meeting for which records are available centrally.

Mr. Tracey: The most recent such meeting was held on 23 April to discuss matters relevant to the London Residuary Body's functions under the Local Government Act 1985.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the payments made by the London Residuary Body, and to which bodies, since 1 April.

Mr. Tracey: Payments, except for those regulated by orders or directions made by my right hon. Friend, are a matter for the London Residuary Body. Appropriate information on payments made by the LRB will be included in its statement of accounts, which will be published in due course. No orders or directions have been made by my right hon. Friend since 1 April.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will direct the London Residuary Body under section 65 of the Local Government Act 1985 to place copies of its minutes in the Library.

Mr. Tracey: No. I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to him on 11 April at column 210 and on 17 April at column 477.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the earliest date upon which hon. Members can expect to receive a report from the London Residuary Body on its affairs following the abolition of the Greater London council.

Mr. Tracey: Residuary bodies have been asked to prepare their first annual reports for the part year from their establishment to 31 March 1986. It is too early to be precise about timing, but we would not expect to receive the first annual report of the London Residuary Body before September. My right hon. Friend will thereafter lay the annual reports in both Houses.

Water Rates

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing (a) the percentage increase in domestic water rates for each year since 1979 for each English regional water authority and the overall average, (b) the cumulative percentage increase since 1979 for each English water authority and the overall average and (c) the average domestic water rates bill per household for each year since 1979 for each English regional water authority and the overall average.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is shown in the table.

Waltham Forest

Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has reached a decision on the proposals submitted to his urban housing renewal unit by the London borough of Waltham Forest; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I am pleased to announce my right hon. Friend's favourable response to two proposals for schemes in Waltham Forest. These schemes, on the Beaumont road and Chingford hall estates, have been worked up by the London borough of Waltham Forest in close consultation with the Department's urban housing renewal unit and Greater London housing division.

On both estates, the council has already opened local management offices and has introduced local repairs teams. These arrangements will be enhanced as part of the agreed schemes. On the Beaumont road estate, the All Saints tower, a 20-storey block of 120 flats, will benefit from the refurbishment of the entrance lobby and the installaton of a video-film entry-system which will be supported by door porters to control access to the block. This will make a positive contribution to security for the residents. I have agreed in principle to a targeted housing investment programme allocation of £176,500 for these works.

I look forward to seeing these proposals being put into effect for the benefit of all the residents of the estate.

Greenwich

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has reached a decision on proposals submitted to his urban housing renewal unit by the London borough of Greenwich; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I am pleased to announce my right hon. Friend's favourable response to a proposal for a scheme on the Barnfield estate in Greenwich which has been worked up in close consultation with my Department's urban housing renewal unit and Greater London housing division.

The council is proposing to open a local management office on the estate, employing six staff, which will look after the day-to-day management of the estate including repairs and maintenance. Localised management is an essential element in measures designed to uplift an estate both in supporting other improvements which are made and in sustaining the benefits of these improvements.

The council has submitted a bid for resources from the unit's targeted housing investment programme allocation for works to improve security on the estate including the provision of entry-phones and security works to doors and windows. I have agreed in principle to an additional HIP allocation of £1,182,800 to cover these works and the establishment of a local estate office. The council is also undertaking a five-year programme of capital repairs to the 568 dwellings on the estate.

I look forward to seeing these proposals being put into effect for the benefit of all the residents of the estate.

Bolton

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has reached a decision on any of the proposals submitted to his urban housing renewal unit by the metropolitan borough of Bolton; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I am pleased to announce my right hon. Friend's favourable response to a scheme in Bolton which the metropolitan borough council has worked up in close consultation with my Depertment's urban housing renewal unit and our north-west regional office.

The estate which will benefit from today's decision is the Oldhams estate. This estate consists of 722 dwellings in a mixture of low-rise flats and houses.

The council is proposing to open a local management office on the estate to be responsible for day-to-day management and general liaison with the tenants, on the lines of the arrangements which my Department's priority estates project team is already developing on another estate in Bolton. I regard the establishment of local management as an essential part of any package of measures to uplift rundown estates.

The council also proposes to dispose of 50 flats on the estate for refurbishment and resale for owner-occupation. We welcome this move to diversify the tenure on the estate and widen the housing choices in the area.

I have agreed to an additional capital allocation of £790,000 from the unit's targeted housing investment programme resources in 1986-87 to enable the council to undertake modernisation and security work on dwellings remaining in its ownership on the estate and to establish the local management office.

I look forward to seeing these proposals being put into effect for the benefit of all the residents of the estate.

Ordnance Survey

Mr. Wolfson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the Ordnance Survey trading accounts.

Mrs. Rumbold: On 24 January 1984, my right hon. Friend, the then Secretary of State for the Environment, said that from 1984-85, Ordnance Survey would publish trading accounts in addition to its normal vote accounts. Unfortunately, National Audit Office examination of the 1984-85 trading accounts has drawn attention to deficiencies, primarily in record keeping, which preclude certification and publication for both 1984-85 and 1985-86. There is no suggestion of any loss or impropriety in these accounts and OS is making every effort to ensure that trading accounts for 1986-87 can be audited and published. The difficulties affecting the trading accounts did not affect the Ordnance Survey appropriation accounts which the Comptroller and Auditor General certified in October 1985.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Matrimonial Law

Mr. Heddle asked the Attorney-General whether he has any plans to implement the recommendations of the Booth report on changes in matrimonial law.

The Attorney-General: In November 1985 the Lord Chancellor's Department invited the views of interested persons and bodies on the detailed recommendations made in the Booth report, and, in particular, on those recommendations which would not require primary legislation. The Government hope to announce their decision concerning those recommendations later this year, in the light of the views received.

Director of Public Prosecutions (Staff Transfers)

Mr. John Morris asked the Attorney-General what is his policy as regards requests by officers in the Director of Public Prosecution's Department to seek level transfer to other Civil Service Departments.

The Attorney-General: Although I have statutory responsibility for the superintendence of the director, day-to-day management of his Department is a matter for him as its permanent head. I understand that any requests for transfer are considered on their merits. While the director naturally endeavours to meet the wishes of individual members of staff, agreement to any transfers must depend on whether the Director of Public Prosecutions Department is able to spare the skills of the staff concerned at that time.

Courts (Sittings)

Mr. John Morris asked the Attorney-General whether he will make a statement on the proposed curtailment of sittings of courts in Wales and Chester, whether the same policy prevails elsewhere; and what changes of policy have taken place since the original policy was announced.

The Attorney-General: Following a reappraisal, earlier provisional proposals to cancel sittings by assistant recorders and deputy registrars on the Wales and Chester circuit have been withdrawn. Allowing for additional full-time appointments which have been made, the overall number of sitting days there is expected to be maintained. The Lord Chancellor's general policy throughout England and Wales is to sustain the greatest practicable number of court sitting days to deal with the significant increase in case loads which has taken place and to keep down delays.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Soviet Nuclear Accident

Mr. Madel asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Soviet authorities for permission for an international inspection team of scientists to visit the site of the nuclear power plant disaster in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We have already informed the Soviet authorities that if they require advice on the accident and its consequences United Kingdom experts are ready to provide it.

The setting up of any international team of scientists would most appropriately be a task for the International Atomic Energy Agency. We understand that the Director-General has already offered the agency's assistance. United Kingdom experts could make a useful contributions to such a group.

EC (Budget Abatement)

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the United Kingdom has received its value added tax abatement in respect of payments into the European Community Budget in 1985.

Mrs. Chalker: The European Community 1986 budget provides for an automatic abatement of the United Kingdom's VAT payments for 1,400 mecu (£900 million) in respect of 1985. As VAT contributions are made monthly and the abatement is made by reducing these contributions in equal monthly amounts, 580 mecu (£375 million) of this abatement has already been made available, and a further 820 mecu will be made available between now and the end of the year. The Commission has also said that it will be proposing as part of a supplementary budget this year an additional correction to our 1985 abatement to cover the difference between the estimate of the amount owing to us, and the actual amount.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Cookers (Suppliers)

Mr. Clelland asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the names of suppliers of reconditioned cookers, paid by his Department's offices on behalf of claimants, in the Newcastle area over the past three years, together with the total sums paid to each supplier over the same period.

Mr. Major: I regret this information is not available.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the cost to his Department of issuing a leaflet to every young person sitting general certificate of education or certificate of secondary education examinations explaining the conditions under which they may claim supplementary benefit, in the light of the decision of the tribunal of commissioners R(F)2/85.

Mr. Major: It is not usual to issue leaflets which provide full details of complex conditions of entitlement. However, the basic cost of a leaflet for young people sitting examinations would be some £40,000 plus distribution costs which would be relatively high since there is no mechanism for such a distribution.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement as to when a young person who is 16 years old after 1 February but attends school in the current term just to take examinations is entitled to supplementary benefit, following the decision of the tribunal of commissioners R(F)2/85 and circular S51/85.

Mr. Major: Such a decision is a matter for the independent adjudicating authorities.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what will be the saving to the social security budget of increasing supplementary benefit by 1·1 per cent. instead of 1·2 per cent. in July 1986 in (a) 1986-87 and (b) a full year.

Mr. Newton: If the main supplementary benefit scale rates were to be increased by 1·2 per cent. this July instead of by £1·1 per cent., the additional cost of the uprating in 1986-87 would be £7 million, equivalent to £11 million in a full year.

NHS (Planning Staff)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidelines his Department gives to National Health Service planning staff to enable them to take account of population trends and local expansion envisaged within local structure plans: and what provision exists to enable planning staff to forecast health care requirements in conjunction with local councils.

Mr. Whitney: The Department has supplied regional health authorities with population projections produced by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys for each of their districts, covering the period 1981 to 2001, but has issued no guidelines on their use. It is for regional and district health authorities to decide what use to make of these projections and of other data, including local structure plans, in discharging their planning responsibilities. In producing their plans district health authorities work closely with local authorities through joint consultative committees.

Benefits (Claimants)

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of claimants in receipt of (a) sickness benefit, (b) invalidity benefit and pension, (c) industrial disablement benefit, (d) non-contributory invalidity pension-housewives non-contributory invalidity pension or severe disablement allowance for the latest available year at (a) Bloomsbury, (b) Finsbury Park, (c) Highgate, (d) Hoxton and (e) Stoke Newington Department of Health and Social Security area offices.

Mr. Major: Bloomsbury local office deals only with claims for supplementary benefit. The number of claimants in receipt of sickness and invalidity benefit-pension and severe disablement allowance as at 8 April 1986, and in receipt of industrial disablement benefit as at 11 February 1986 (the latest dates for which information is available) at (a) Finsbury Park, (b) Highgate, (c) Hoxton and (d) Stoke Newington social security offices is as follows:

	Sickness and invalidity benefits pension	Severe disablement allowance	Industrial disablement benefit
Finsbury Park	1,867	216	177
Highgate	2,085	359	330
Hoxton	1,495	250	195
Stoke Newington	1,839	168	115

Separate records are not kept of the number of claimants in receipt of sickness and invalidity benefit-pension.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the number of claimant couples with children in receipt of (a) unemployment benefit only, (b) supplementary benefit only and (c) unemployment benefit and supplementary benefit for the latest available year at (a) Bloomsbury, (b) Finsbury Park, (c) Highgate, (d) Hoxton and (e) Stoke Newington Department of Health and Social Security area offices; (2) what is the number of claimants excluding pensioner claimants and claimants with dependent children, in receipt of (a) unemployment benefit only, (b) supplementary benefit only and (c) unemployment benefit and supplementary benefit for the latest available year at Bloomsbury, Finsbury Park, Highgate, Hoxton, and Stoke Newington area offices of his Department.

Mr. Major: I regret that this information is not available centrally, Statistics are not kept routinely so that the information requested could be obtained only by a special exercise which would be disproportionately expensive.

Residential Care

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list for each district health authority, the National Health Service residential accommodation which is empty, and the number of beds unused in each case.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that this information is not held centrally.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, how many people are currently in nursing homes and residental care and receiving supplementary benefit; and what number and proportion of these also claim the attendance allowance.

Mr. Newton: In December 1983, the latest available date, there were 26,427 supplementary benefit claimants in residential care and nursing homes. It is estimated that about 11,000 of these people (about 43 per cent.) were in receipt of attendance allowance.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the names and areas of all private residential nursing homes into which there has been an inquiry in each year from 1979 to 1986; and what was the outcome in each case.

Mr. Whitney: Responsibility for registering and inspecting these homes rests where it properly belongs with local authorities, and the Registered Homes Act 1984, which came into operation on 1 January 1985, improved and strengthened their powers. No information is held centrally about authorities which instituted inquiries.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, if he will give the names and areas of all private residential nursing homes which have been subject to a registered homes tribunal hearing for each year from 1979 to 1986; and what was the outcome in each case.

Mr. Whitney: Registered homes tribunals have been constituted only since 1 January 1985 when the Registered Homes Act 1984 was brought into force. Decisions of the tribunals are deposited quarterly in the Library.

Long-term Benefit

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many (a) claimants and (b) dependants are currently drawing long-term national insurance benefits.

Mr. Major: The latest figures available are as follows:

Benefit		Number in receipt (thousands)	Date
Retirement Pension
	(i)	9,562	30 September 1985
	(ii)	157	30 September 1985
Widow's Pension
	(i)	292	30 September 1985
	(ii)	—
Widowed Mother's Allowance
	(i)	62	30 September 1985
	(ii)	93	30 September 1985
Widowed Mother's Allowance (Personal)
	(i)	31	30 September 1985
	(ii)	—
Invalidity Benefits
	(i)	849	30 March 1985
	(ii)	391	30 March 1985

Notes:

(i) For retirement pension, widow's pension, widowed mother's allowance (personal), the figure represents numbers in receipt of personal benefit. For invalidity benefit, the figure represents numbers of claimants.

(ii) For retirement pension and widowed mother's allowance, the figure represents numbers of dependants. No dependency additions are paid with widow's pension or WMA(P). For invalidity benefit, the figure represents the number of claimants with dependants rather than the number of dependants themselves.

Maternity Allowance

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many of the responses to the consultation on statutory maternity allowance supported the proposals for payment of maternity allowance by employers; and how many opposed it.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Asbestos

Mr. McKelvey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action has been taken on the Standing Medical Advisory Committee report, "Control of the Cancer Hazard due to Asbestos to the General Population".

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Claimants

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of (a) single payments and (b) urgent needs payments, weekly and one-off, paid to claimants who are (i) under pensionable age and are not required to register for work, (ii) persons under pensionable age required to register for work and (iii) persons over pensionable age; and what is the average rate per 1,000 claimants, the average payment made to claimants, and the number of claimants with dependent children in each of the categories (i), (ii) and (iii) for the Galashiels ILO for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: The following table sets out the information available on (a) single payments and (b) urgent need payments made by Galashiels office during the year ended April 1986 for the categories of claimants specified. Information about payments made to claimants with dependent children is not available.

Galashiels ILO

	Claimants under pensionable age not required to register for work	Claimants under pensionable age required to register for work	Claimants over pensionable age
(a). Single payments
Number of awards	2,001	2,581	569

	Claimants under pensionable age not required to register for work	Claimants under pensionable age required to register for work	Claimants over pensionable age
Average rate per 1,000	1,242	1,330	215
Average payment	£88·42	£73·82	£62·19
(b). Urgent needs payments
Number of awards	80	219	1
Average rate per 1,000	50	113	—

Information is not kept of the amounts of urgent needs payments made.

Single and urgent need payment awards for year ending April 1986 have been set against the counts of live cases in action at 12 February 1986 for the calculation of a rate for 1,000 claimants (these are the latest available figures).

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, what is the number of claimants in receipt of (a) unemployment benefit only, (b) supplementary benefit only and (c) unemployment and supplementary benefits at Galashiels ILO for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: The number of claimants in receipt of unemployment benefit only from Galashiels unemployment benefit office at the last count on 10 April 1986 was 938. The number of claimants in receipt of either supplementary benefit only or unemployment benefit and supplementary benefit from Galashiels ILO at the last count on 11 February 1986 was 1941. I regret that information on the breakdown between the two is not available.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, what is the number of claimant couples with children in receipt of (a) unemployment benefit only, (b) supplementary benefit only and (c) unemployment and supplementary benefit for the Galashiels ILO for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: I regret that this information is not available centrally. Statistics are not kept routinely so that the information requested could be obtained only by a special exercise which would be disproportionately expensive.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, what is the number of claimants in receipt of (a) sick benefit, (b) invalidity benefit/pension, (c) industrial disablement benefit and (d) non-contributory invalidity pension, housewives' non-contributory invalidity pension or severe disablement allowance for the latest available year for Galashiels ILO.

Mr. Major: The number of claimants at the Galashiels ILO in receipt of sickness and invalidity benefit/pension and severe disablement allowance as at 8 April 1986, and in receipt of industrial disablement benefit as at 11 February 1986 (the latest dates for which information is available) is as follows:

	Number
Sickness and invalidity benefit/pension	1,195
Severe disablement allowance	464
Industrial disablement benefit	386

Separate records are not kept of the number of claimants in receipt of sickness and invalidity benefit/pension.

Bethlem Royal Hospital

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, what is the size of the waiting list at the addiction research unit of the institute of psychiatry at the Bethlem Royal and Maudsley joint hospital.

Mr. Whitney: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member the information he requests. It is not collected centrally. The hon. Member may wish to approach the chairman of the special health authority for the information he seeks.

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether Her Majesty's Government envisage a role for the Bethlem Royal and Maudsley joint hospital in its plans to tackle drug addiction.

Mr. Whitney: The hospital plays a valuable role in the provision of teaching, research and in the specialist treatment of drug addiction. I trust this will continue.

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make a statement on the proposals announced by the general manager of the Bethlem Royal hospital and Maudsley hospital health authority, as to the future of the Bethlem Royal hospital, Maudsley hospital and the institute of psychiatry.

Mr. Whitney: We are aware that the Bethlem Royal hospital and Maudsley hospital special health authority is considering proposals for the rationalisation of services, which are designed to contain its costs in the coming year. Its recommendations will be discussed with the Department before any final decisions are made. The institute of psychiatry, part of London university's postgraduate medical federation, is not a direct responsibility of the Department.

Nurses (Accommodation)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has sent a health circular to every district health authority instructing them not to evict any nurse from National Health Service nursing homes.

Mr. Hayhoe: The Department is advising health authorities that the policy of rationalising the residential estate is to be administered so that no one living in such accommodation is made homeless as a result. As my right hon. Friend made clear in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Erith and Crayford (Mr. Evennett) on 25 April, at column 263, no one is to be required to move from his or her present accommodation as part of this policy without being offered a suitable alternative place to live.

Mental Health Act 1959

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has about regional variations in the use made of section 136 of the Mental Health Act 1959; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The available information for 1983 and 1984 is given in the following table. The information for earlier years was given in the reply by my hon. Friend the Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Mr. Patten) to the hon. Member on 24 January 1984 at column 550.

Notes:

1. During 1983 and 1984 there were no reported admissions under Section 136 to mental nursing homes.
2. Patients will have been counted more than once in a given year if re-admitted under Section 136 during that year.

Elderly Persons

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was (a) the number of available places, staff and beds, (b) the rates per 1,000 of appropriate population and (c) the expenditure per 1,000 of appropriate population in respect of (i) residential places, (ii) day care places, (iii) home helps, (iv) social workers and (v) home meals per week for those aged 65 years and over for each local authority in England, Scotland and Wales for each year from 1979 to 1985 inclusive, giving the national averages for (a), (b) and (c) in each case.

Mr. Whitney: The information is not held centrally in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was (a) the number of available place, staff and beds, (b) the rates per 1,000 of appropriate population and (c) the expenditure per 1,000 of appropriate population in respect of (i) geriatric in-patients, (ii) geriatric out-patients (iii) elderly severely mentally infirm in-patients, (iv) elderly severely mentally infirm out-patients, (v) non-psychiatric day-patients, (vi) health visitors, (vii) district nurses and (viii) chiropody for those aged 65 years and over for each district health authority in England, Scotland and Wales for each year from 1979 to 1985 inclusive, giving the national averages for (a), (b) and (c) in each case.

Mr. Whitney: Information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

EC (Trade Statistics)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the value of output of textiles, clothing and footwear, respectively, in each European Economic Community country in terms of pound sterling in 1970 and the latest year for which figures are available, together with imports from and exports to other European Economic Community countries in each case.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information on output for the nearest available years relates to 1973 and 1981. This, together with trade figures for 1970 and 1984, is in the following table.

Oil Prices

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing what effect he estimates the fall in oil prices will have on the earnings of each of the oil-producing countries on the basis of their net exports in 1985 and the current price of oil, together with their imports of manufactures from the United Kingdom, the rest of the European Economic Community, Japan and the United States of America.

Mr. Alan Clark: There is insufficient information available on 1985 trade flows for the majority of oil exporters to provide reasonable estimates of the effect of the fall in oil prices in the manner requested. Information on the exports of manufactures to OPEC countries in 1985 by the United Kingdom and the rest of the European Community is given in the table. Similar information for Japan and the United States of America is not yet available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the United Kingdom, Germany, Japan, France, Italy, Belgium and Holland (a) the balance of trade in manufactures in 1985 and (b) the balance of trade in manufactures in the most recent year in which the United States' trade deficit was close to zero.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the first three months of 1986 at an annual rate compared with the same three months in 1985 and the year 1970 (a) imports and exports of manufactures between the United Kingdom and the European Economic Community and other countries, and (b) imports and exports less crude oil between the United Kingdom and the European Economic Community and from other countries; and if he will make a statement about the decline in exports of manufactures in the first quarter of the current year compared with 1985 and the reasons therefor.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 1 may 1986, c. 454]: The information is in the table. Annualised figures can be unreliable as a guide to the outturn for the year. In the first quarter of this year United Kingdom exports of manufactures were higher than the quarterly average for any year except 1985.

Monopolies and Mergers

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether, in the course of his review of monopolies and mergers policy, he will consider the question of whether a bidder in a contested situation should be allowed to propose the conditional disposal of subsidiaries of the target company; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: I shall carefully consider my hon. Friend's suggestion in deciding the scope of a review of competition policy which I hope to announce soon.

European Community

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing inwards and outwards investment with the European Economic Community countries each year since 1970 for manufacturing and non-manufacturing, excluding oil; and if he will provide similar figures for non-European Economic Community countries.

Mr. Alan Clark: Details of overseas direct investment (excluding oil), inward and outward, manufacturing and non-manufacturing for EC and non-EC countries are given in the table. EC figures exclude Spain and Portugal and include all other members for all years shown.

Electrical Goods (Competition)

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will refer to the Office of Fair Trading the competitive situation in the electrical goods market with a view to an assessment as to whether the best interests of consumers would be served by further concentration of ownership of retail outlets and market share.

Mr. Howard: It is one of the duties of the Director General of Fair Trading to advise my right hon. Friend whether a merger or merger proposal should be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission for further investigation. It is the role of the MMC under the Fair Trading Act 1973 to examine the specific mergers or merger proposals which have been referred to it. The Commission has no locus under a merger reference to examine the competitive situation in a whole sector of the market, unless it considers the question to be relevant in the circumstances of a particular case under investigation.

Toys

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is satisfied with the current definition of toy in the Toy (Safety) Regulations 1974; if he will extend it to include any article which because of its size or appearance could be mistaken for a child's plaything; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Libya (Corned Beef)

Mr. Allen Adams asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to the country of origin of corned beef being exported from Troon Harbour to Libya.

Mr. Gummer: I have been asked to reply.

There have been no recent exports of corned beef from Troon to Libya.

West Germany

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report his estimate of the effect which the increase of 35 per cent. in the real rate of exchange between sterling and the deutschmark had on United Kingdom imports from the exports to West Germany between the first quarter of 1979 and the third quarter of 1985; what were the nominal rates of exchange in each period; what is the present rate of exchange; and what is his estimate of the difference in the rate of inflation between the United Kingdom and West Germany since the third quarter of 1985.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 1 May 1986, c. 454-56]: No. Any such estimate would involve many arbitrary assumptions and would thus be highly speculative.

The nominal exchange rate in the first quarter of 1979 was 3·7401 Dm/£; in the third quarter of 1985 3·9197 Dm/£ and in March 1986 3·3254 Dm/£. Between the third quarter of 1985 and February 1986 the United Kingdom retail price index rose by 1·3 per cent. compared with an increase of 0·3 per cent. in the consumer price index for the German Federal Republic.

TRANSPORT

Marylebone Station

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, since the original proposal was made by British Rail to close Marylebone station in May 1986, he has been given the financial reasons which seek to justify this closure.

Mr. David Mitchell: British Rail announced on Wednesday that it does not now intend to proceed with the present closure proposal. The question of supporting financial information does not therefore arise.

Railway Closures

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps in all future railway closures to ensure that an opportunity is given to the local authorities involved publicly to question the closure proposal.

Mr. Ridley: The statutory closure procedures already allow for local authorities to make objections and for transport users' consultative committees to hear such objections in public.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide the following information relating to trunk road: (a) the total cost of accidents in 1985, (b) the total sum allocated to his regional offices specifically for small cost-effective engineering schemes for accident reduction in 1985, (c) the proportion of his Department's budget and expenditure on trunk roads allocated to such schemes in 1985, (d) the amount specifically allocated to schemes of this type during European Road Safety Year 1986, and this total as a proportion of his Department's trunk road budget for the current year, and (e) an estimate of the savings in accidents likely to result from this expenditure on small schemes during 1986.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Final accident figures for 1985 are not yet available. The total estimated cost of injury accidents on trunk roads (excluding motorways) in England in 1984 was £120 million.

We do not allocate sums specifically for accident reduction schemes. In 1985-86, the Department spent £31 million on small safety and improvement schemes. Most are designed specifically to enhance road safety. In 1986-87, we plan tp spend £35 million on such schemes. Major national schemes also enhance road safety by removing traffic from unsuitable roads and from small towns and villages.

It is not possible to estimate accurately the savings in accidents resulting from road schemes. National road schemes generally achieve an economic return of £1·50 for each £1 spent resulting from accident savings and other benefits such as reduced journey times. Within this, accident savings are estimated to account for about 20p for each £1 spent. In 1985-86, expenditure on national scheme works was £429 million and in 1986-87 we plan to spend £431 million.

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for Transport how soon after the completion of a trunk road contract any outstanding work is required to be completed; and what steps are taken if there is delay in completion of that work.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The maintenance period normally lasts for 52 weeks from completion of the main works. Under the terms of the contract, the contractor is required to complete all outstanding maintenance work by the end of the maintenance period or as soon as practicable afterwards if the Department agrees to defer — for example, on the grounds of safety or reducing disruption to traffic. If the contractor fails to complete the maintenance work as required, the Department may make other arrangements to carry out the work and recover the cost from the contractor.

Dounreay

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration has been given to the use of Hunterston or other Clyde ports in relation to the transportation of nuclear materials to Dounreay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: Neither my Department nor the Clyde port authority has been approached about or considered the possible use of Hunterston or any other Clyde port for the transport of nuclear materials to or from Dounreay.

Bus Routes (Scotland)

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many profit-making bus routes have been registered in Scotland; and, of these, how many are new services.

Mr. Ridley: One thousand eight hundred and sixty. Information is not readily available about how many of these are wholly or partly different from existing services.

Driving Licences

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, pursuant to the answer of 24 April to the hon. Member for Leicester, East, he will list the practical considerations which militate against the inclusion in driving licences of further personal details, such as place of birth; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer [pursuant to his reply, 1 May 1986, c. 481]: It would be impractical to obtain this information from the 30 million existing licence holders.

The public at large is unlikely to accept the need for inclusion of such information.

There would be difficulties in designing a licence which contained these details in a place where they could not be seen through the window envelope (necessary for postal dispatch) or when the licence is in the plastic wallet.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Value Added Tax

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the latest figures available for the total amount of value added tax collected from each trade group together with the total numbers registered in each group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The total number registered in each trade group are as follows:

Trade Group	Number registered (as at 31 March 1985)
Primary Industries
Agriculture, forestry and fishing	181,600
Mining and quarrying	1,400
Manufacturing Industries
Food, drink and tobacco	9,700
Coal and petroleum products	200
Chemicals and allied industries	3,600
Metal manufacture	2,700
Mechanical engineering	24,400
Instrument engineering	3,100
Electrical engineering	9,900
Shipbuilding, boatbuilding and marine engineering	2,000

Wholesale distribution	80,800
Retail distribution	265,900
Dealers	31,000
Services
Insurance, banking, finance and business services	78,000
Professional and scientific services	87,000
Miscellaneous	296,600
Public administration and defence	1,200
	1,458,900

I regret that up-to-date information on the tax collected from each trade group cannot be provided. This is a consequence of changes to the accounting procedure for tax due on imported goods which were introduced on 1 November 1984. Until then, any VAT due on imports by registered persons was declared separately on the VAT return with an offsetting input tax claim. Since 1 November, VAT paid on imports is no longer entered on returns. It is, however, still claimed as a deduction, along with other deductible input tax, but is not separately identified. Consequently, any comparisons of trade groups based on the net tax shown on returns would now be seriously distorted.

The latest figures available that break down net tax by trade group are those for 1983-84; they are contained in table 9 on page 40 of the report of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise for the year ending 31 March 1984. There is a copy in the Library of the House.

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the latest available statistics for the total number of prosecutions brought by Customs and Excise in respect of the new procedures for value added tax passed in the Finance Act 1985; and if he will estimate the total value of penalties levied as a consequence of these prosecutions.

Mr. Brooke: The Finance Act 1985 introduced provisions to remove the sancton of criminal prosecution for many VAT offences and to replace it by a system of civil penalties. For those provisions which were implemented as from Royal Assent to the Finance Act 1985 there have, therefore, been no subsequent prosecutions. The number of civil penalties imposed up to 24 April 1986 is 2,666 and their total value about £1,316,000. Of these, 2,625 penalties were for belated notification of liability to be registered for VAT under section 15 of the Act. This represents less than 2 per cent. of the total number of new registrations (about 138,000) in the same period.

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if any extra Customs and Excise staff have been deployed to investigation work as a result of the implementation of the Keith committee proposals for value added tax; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will give the number of businesses registered for value added tax at the latest convenient dates within the following turnover bands: £0, £1-£19,500, £19,500-£49,500, £50,000-£99,000, £100,000-£499,000, £500,000-£1,999,000 and £2,000,000-plus; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Income Tax

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what increase in the standard rate of income tax would be needed in the standard regions of England south of a line from Bristol to the Wash to balance a 1p reduction for taxpayers in the rest of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moore: In round terms, one penny.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the percentage share of tax paid by the top 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 per cent. of income earners for each year since 1978-79.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Civil Servants (Ethnic Origin)

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what benefits he expects to derive from the survey on the ethnic origin of civil servants.

Mr. Luce: I have been asked to reply.

The information should help the Government to identify any areas where ethnic minorities may be under-represented in the Civil Service and to determine whether any under-representation requires more detailed investigation.

EMPLOYMENT

Fishing Industry

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General what is his estimate of the number of fishermen made redundant in each of the years 1976 to 1984, the average earnings of trawlermen in each of those years, the number of employed trawlermen in each year and the amount paid into the redundancy fund in each of these years on behalf of employed fishermen.

Mr. Lang: I regret that the information requested is not available: the various statistics referred to do not distinguish sufficiently between specific occupational groups. The hon. Member may wish to contact my Department to establish whether any more broadly based information relevant to his area of interest is available.

News International (Wapping)

Mr. Deakins asked the Paymaster General if he is satisfied that all foreign nationals working at the Wapping plant of News International have work permits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: My Department does not have information as to how many foreign nationals are working at the plant. In the last 12 months one work permit has been issued for employment with the News International Group. Applications in respect of six other foreign nationals are at present under consideration.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General whether he will publish in the Official Report, a table showing such information as is available to him for the Group of Five countries relating to the latest figure for employment in the production industries compared with 1973 and 1979.

Mr. Lang: The available information is given in the following table:

Total employment in production and construction industries

* Seasonally adjusted.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Paymaster General whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the numbers employed in 1970, May 1979 and at the latest available date in man-made fibres, cotton, wool, hosiery, carpets, finishing trades, clothing, footwear, motor cars, heavy commercial vehicles, shipbuilding, coal, iron and steel, chemicals than other pharmaceuticals, aircraft and mechanical engineering; and if he will give such figures as are available for Germany and Japan.

Mr. Lang: Estimates of employees in employment by industry are not available on a comparable basis for dates prior to June 1971. Reliable estimates for each subdivision of industry are not available on a comparatable basis for dates prior to September 1981. The available information for the industries specified is given in the following table.

Some information for Germany and Japan, though at a more aggregated level, is published in the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development's "Labour Force Statistics 1963-1983," a copy of which is available in the Library, on pages 236 to 243 and 108 to 115, respectively.

Wages Councils (Leicester)

Mr. Janner asked the Paymaster General how many establishments in Leicester are covered by wages councils orders; how many establishments in Leicester were visited in the last five years for which records are available by officers of the Wages Inspectorate; and what were the results of those visits.

Mr. Trippier: The information requested is not available for areas smaller than wages inspectorate divisions.

In the midlands (east) division in January 1985 there were 29,946 establishments on the wages inspectorate's register.

The results of wages inspections by visit in the last five years are shown in the table. The figures are not representative of the extent to which employers comply with wages council legislation as the wages inspectorate tends to concentrate its visits on establishments more likely to be underpaying.

Midlands (East) division of the Wages Inspectorate

	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985

Job Creation

Mr. Frank Field asked the Paymaster General if he will list for each region the latest figures of additional jobs created since June 1979 for (a) employees who are full-time (b) employees who are part-time and (c) self-employed.

Mr. Lang: Information about job gains and job losses is not available from the Department's statistics, but an indication of the net changes can be seen by comparing levels of employment at different dates.

The following tables give the comparisons between levels of employment in each region in June 1979 and the latest date in 1985 for which figures are available. Estimates of the numbers of part-time male employees in employment are not separately available for these dates.

Net changes between June 1979 and December 1985 in numbers of employees in employment

SCOTLAND

Examinations

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many young people in Scotland took (a) general certificate of education O levels, (b) certificate of secondary education examinations and (c) both sets of examinations in 1985; and of these groups what is his best estimate of the number who did not return to school in the September term.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Information in the form requested is not available centrally. In Scotland, the overwhelming majority of young people seeking certificated awards are presented for Scottish certificate of education (SCE) ordinary grade examinations. In 1984, the latest year for which information is available, 69,514 pupils in their fourth year of secondary education were presented for SCE ordinary grade examinations, of whom an estimated 23,300 did not return to school in August 1984.

School Leavers

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many young people in Scotland at (a) the minimum school leaving age, (b) one year above and (c) two years above minimum school leaving age left school at 1985; and of these groups what is his best estimate of the number who (a) were eligible to leave at the end of the Easter term and (b) did leave at the end of the Easter term.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Information is not readily available in the form requested, since in Scotland there is a Christmas but no Easter leaving date. The table contains some relevant information, for session 1984-85, on Scottish school leavers.

Pupils leaving on attaining the minimum school leaving age	Pupils leaving after attaining the minimum school leaving age
	Year of secondary education
	Third or fourth	Fifth		Sixth
		1st term	2nd-3rd term	1st term	2nd-3rd term
39,056	3,379	2,440	18,624	1,862	17,558

The table excludes 2,900 school leavers from independent or special schools.

Scottish Grand Committee

Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Scottish Office staff are transported from London solely for the purpose of Scottish Grand Committee meetings in Edinburgh; and if he will estimate the cost of this.

Mr. Rifkind: None. No additional cost is therefore incurred; indeed, as Scottish Office staff from Edinburgh do not have to travel to London, travel and subsistence costs that would otherwise arise are avoided.

Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the additional cost of holding each individual session of the Scottish Grand Committee in Edinburgh, including heating, lighting, staffing, policing and security, and miscellaneous expenditure.

Mr. Rifkind: The additional costs involved are very small as the staffing, policing and security requirements are met by deploying personnel from other duties. Costs of around £70 are incurred on additional security, cleaning and lighting.

Roadworks, Caithness

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current proposed starting date for the construction of the new Dunbeath bridge on the A9 in Caithness; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Construction of the Dunbeath scheme is planned to start at the end of the current financial year. However, this depends on resolving the outstanding objections to the draft road orders and any objections to the draft compulsory purchase order which will be published this summer.

Planning Appeals

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many planning appeals have been made to his office during each of the past five years.

Mr. Ancram: The number of planning appeals received in each of the past five years is as follows:

	Number
1981	549
1982	500
1983	533
1984	568
1985	606

Transport Infrastructure

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what further proposals he has for improving the transport infrastructure in Scotland in general and Inverclyde in particular.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. and learned Friend has made provision in 1986-87 of £77 million for new construction and improvements in the trunk road network, and £18 million for structural repair work. He has provided allocations of £159 million for local authority capital expenditure on roads and transport, The Scottish Transport Group plans capital expenditure in the year of £22 million. Substantial provision has also been made for revenue expenditure on roads and for subsidy to public transport services.

The details are set out in the "Scottish Commentary on Public Expenditure," a copy of which was sent to the hon. Member. If the hon. Member has in mind a particular issue concerning Inverclyde, he may care to write to me.

Probation Orders

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland for the latest year for which figures are available, what is the percentage of persons aged (a) over 21 years and (b) under 21 years who successfully completed probation orders without breach or conviction for a further offence.

Mr. John MacKay: The information requested is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Community Service Orders

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state, for the latest year for which figures are available, the percentage of persons aged (a) over 21 years and (b) under 21 years who successfully completed community service orders without breach or conviction for a further offence.

Mr. John MacKay: The information is set out in the table.

Community service orders terminated in 1984: Percentage of persons completing sentence without breach or further conviction and with specified number of hours completed

	Per Cent.
Offender aged under 21	76
Offender aged 21 and over	81

Prisoners (Homeless Discharge Grant)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, for the latest year for which figures are available, what was the percentage of prisoners discharged from prison establishments in Scotland who (a) qualified for the homeless discharge grant and (b) were of no fixed address.

Mr. John MacKay: This information is not held centrally and could be provide only at disproportionate cost.

Parole

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, (1) for the latest year for which figures are available, what was the percentage of persons successfully completing a period of parole licence without breach or conviction for a further offence; (2) how many of those prisoners, granted parole in 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985, were subsequently recalled to prison.

Mr. John MacKay: Information is not available in the form requested. Persons who were reported for breach of parole or life licence conditions and persons issued with a recall order were not necessarily released on parole or life licence in the same year.

Figures for the number of persons released on parole or life licence reported for breaches of licence conditions and issued with recall orders are given in the annual reports of the Parole Board for Scotland (copies of which are available in the Library). The relevant figures for 1982, 1983 and 1984 are as follows:

	1982	1983	1984
Number of persons released on parole licence or on life licence	290	378	260
Number of cases of breach of parole or life licence conditions or reported to the Parole Board for Scotland	84	55	57
Number of recall orders issued to persons previously released on parole or life licence	27	28	35

Note: Figures for 1985 are not yet available.

Petty Offenders

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking or plans to take to divert petty offenders, including the mentally ill and alcoholics from custody.

Mr. John MacKay: The Scottish Home and Health Department is monitoring 13 schemes now operating in various sheriff court areas throughout Scotland whereby individuals charged with offences, mainly of a minor nature, who are considered to be likely to benefit from social work help are referred to social work departments as an alternative to prosecution. A further scheme is operating in Glasgow to allow diversion in similar circumstances of individuals who may benefit from psychiatric care. Also relevant are the powers contained in the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1980 which enable a policeman, instead of arresting a drunken person suspected of an offence, to take him to a "designated place" for the care of drunken persons. Another important development is the recruitment of fines officers (so far in four sheriff court areas), one of whose principal objectives is to reduce the number of offenders being imprisoned for defaulting on the payment of fines. Finally, a number of alternative sentences available to the courts, and the judges, in sentencing, will have regard to both the nature and circumstances of the offence and the offender in determining whether a custodial sentence is appropriate.

Prison Service

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what increase in real terms in expenditure on the prison service is expected between the financial years 1986-87 and 1988-89.

Mr. John MacKay: The Government's expenditure plans are expressed in cash terms. Present plans are for gross expenditure on the prisons service in Scotland to increase from £69·45 million in 1986-87 to £75·45 million in 1988-89. Using the GDP deflator, this represents an increase of 2 per cent. in real terms. Planned provision for the prison service for the forward years will be reviewed in the course of the 1986 public expenditure survey.

Prisoners (Statistics)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of prisoners detained in prisons and detention centres in Scotland according to the latest available information.

Mr. John MacKay: The number of prisoners held in penal establishments in Scotland on the night of 22 April 1986 was 5,621, of whom 4,275 were in prisons, 894 in young offenders institutions, 170 in detention centres and 282 in a remand institution.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Plastic Bullets

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the chief constable of a police force which does not deploy plastic bullets may, under the arrangements for mutual support, request their use by police called in from other forces under the mutual aid arrangements.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Yes; section 14 of the Police Act 1964 would enable requests for such assistance to be met.

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether plastic bullets and riot guns were on operational service with police during the 1984-85 miners' strike.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No.

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many officers in the Metropolitan police were trained in the use of plastic bullets during 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985; and where in London Metropolitan police training in the use of plastic bullets is carried out.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner that about 80 officers a year received initial or refresher training in the use of plastic baton rounds between 1981 and 1984. In 1985, about 120 officers received training. Training takes place in the public order training centre at Hounslow and other Metropolitan police establishments.

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to which police forces in England and Wales conduct training sessions in the use of plastic bullets.

Mr. Giles Shaw: This information is not collected centrally. Equipment of this kind is to be used only by police officers who have been trained in its use and know its characteristics. I listed the forces which hold plastic baton rounds in reply to a question by the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) on 19 November at columns 140-41.

Police Vehicles (Accidents)

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people in London in each of the last three years have been killed or injured as a result of accidents with police vehicles or in the course of police pursuit by a vehicle.

Mr. Hurd: The number of people killed as a result of road accidents with police vehicles, or in the course of pursuit by a police vehicle, in the Metropolitan police and the City of London police force areas is as follows:

	1983	1984	1985
Metropolitan Police in the course of police pursuit	2	5	3
City of London Police in the course of police pursuit	0	0	0
Metropolitan Police in other circumstances	1	0	4
City of London Police in other circumstances	0	0	0
Total	3	5	7

The information requested about the number of people injured is not available. The following figures relate to the number of accidents invoiving Metropolitan police* and City of London police vehicles where injury occurred.

	1983	1984	1985
Metropolitan Police in the course of police pursuit	9	9	10
City of London Police in the course of police pursuit	0	0	0
Metropolitan Police in other circumstances	90	90	120
City of London Police in other circumstances	44	42	67
Total	143	141	197

* The figures for the Metropolitan police relating to injuries prior to October 1985 include only those resulting from accidents where the police driver was regarded as blameworthy.

The victims to which these figures relate include police officers as well as other members of the public.

Prison Service (Ethnic Origin Survey)

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what as been the amount of the charge on the prison service budget of the total cost of the survey on the ethnic origin of civil servants.

Mr. Mellor: It is not possible to identify separately the costs incurred in the prison service in participating in the surveys of the ethnic origins of civil servants.

Prisoners

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of prisoners detained in her Majesty's prisons and detention centres according to the latest available information.

Mr. Mellor: On 25 April 1986 there were 35,475 persons held in prisons and 1,253 persons held in detention centres in England and Wales.

Prison Officers

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the secretary of State for the Home Department what categories of job are performed by the 3,000 custodial officers working in the prison department.

Mr. Mellor: There is no group of staff so designated within the prison department.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many weeks a prison officer's official training lasts.

Mr. Mellor: Initial training normally lasts for 14 weeks and consists of a three-week attachment to an establishment; a nine-week residential course; and two weeks induction at the establishment to which the officer is posted.

Prisoners (Visits)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what circumstances relatives who visit prisoners under the assisted visits scheme are entitled to subsistence payments in addition to fares.

Mr. Mellor: When a relative is entitled to assistance with a visit to a prisoner, subsistence payments are made in the following circumstances. If the relative will be away from home for five hours or more, a payment may be made to cover the cost of meals at amounts specified by the Supplementary Benefit Requirement Regulations. If the return journey to the prison and back cannot be completed in one day, or if the relative is being assisted to make more than one visit and an overnight stay is required, payment may be made for bed and breakfast accommodation.

Opium Poppies

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to ban the planting of opium poppy crops in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We shall decide on any necessary action in the light of the report which is being prepared jointly by officials of this Department and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Members' Correspondence

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of time taken by his Department to answer correspondence received from hon. Members.

Mr. Hurd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Gower (Mr. Wardell) on 18 March at column 104.

Airports

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of the non-statutory procedures and criteria for airports applying for port-of-entry status.

Mr. Waddington: It is open to the management of any airport to apply for the designation of that airport as a port of entry under the Immigration Act 1971. The airport will be considered for designation when it has been demonstrated that scheduled services carrying substantial numbers of passengers subject to immigration control arrive at the airport. An airport may also be considered for designation if it is a main diversion airport for international flights. An airport will not be designated as a port of entry unless the accommodation and facilities are adequate for the efficient operation of the immigration control.

Weapons (Shops Register)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Metropolitan police maintains a register of shops or dealers selling crossbows, airguns, catapults and martial arts devices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that in accordance with the Firearms Act 1968 he keeps a register of firearms dealers, but this register is not required to extend, nor does it extend, to shops or dealers dealing in articles which do not require a certificate under the Act.

Emergency Services Personnel (Uniform)

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what progress he has made in standardising the use of head gear by emergency services so that the diced cap bands worn by ambulancemen, the fire service and the police are distinguishable from one another in all conditions of light;

(2) if he will issue advice to the royal parks constabulary, the British Legion car park attendants and private security firms about the confusion that arises when their diced cap bands appear indistinguishable in poor light from those worn by police officers.

Mr. Hurd: My Department is discussing this matter with the local authority associations and police representative bodies.

Leeds-Bradford Airport

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the number of passenger terminal movements at Leeds-Bradford airport in 1985 and as to the percentage change in that number since 1984; and what equivalent information he has in relation to the nine other airports designated as ports of entry.

Mr. Waddington: In 1985 the total of passenger arrivals on international flights at Leeds-Bradford airport was 104,951 which represented a 30 per cent. increase over 1984. Of these passengers 101,830 were British citizens or European Community nationals and 3,121 were other foreign and Commonwealth nationals, increases of 29 and 66 per cent. respectively over 1984.

Leeds-Bradford airport is not designated as a port of entry under the Immigration Act 1971. There are 22 airports so designated, but it is not possible in the time available to obtain the relevant information without disproportionate costs.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now designate Leeds-Bradford airport as a port of entry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: We have no plans to designate Leeds-Bradford airport as a port of entry under the Immigration Act 1971.

Boys (Remand)

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any boys under the age of 15 years have been remanded into adult prison establishments in England and Wales since 31 March 1981.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to his reply, 18 April 1986, c. 512]: Boys aged 14 may not be lawfully remanded to a prison department establishment. If a prison department establishment identifies a boy received on remand as being under age, their normal procedure is to notify the court so that arrangements can be made for him to be transferred to the care of the local authority. The information available centrally, which is approximate and cannot be comprehensively checked, relates to initial receptions on remand and shows four such receptions of those aged under 15 in 1983, one in 1984, and one in 1985 into adult prisons (including adult prisons with remand units/wings for prisoners aged under 21 and remand centres taking remand prisoners of all ages). Corresponding figures for earlier years could be provided only at disproportionate cost. All such reports are now taken up with the establishment concerned.

Heathrow Airport (Immigration Officers)

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many interpreters are available to assist immigration officers at Heathrow air terminal; how many interpreters were on duty on 12, 13 and 14 April; how many passengers arriving at Heathrow on those days were detained awaiting to be interviewed; what was the shortest and longest period of detention; how many passengers detained were accommodated in hotels and at what cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington [pursuant to his reply, 21 April 1986, c. 15]: Eight full-time interpreters and a pool of about 200 hourly paid interpreters are available to assist with the examination of passengers at the four Heathrow terminals. The eight full-time interpreters are stationed at terminal 3 but attend the other terminals as required.

On 12, 13 and 14 April there were five, five and seven full-time interpreters available, respectively. Hourly paid interpreters were used as follows:

	April 12	April 13	April 14
Terminal 1	—	—	—
Terminal 2	2	3	3
Terminal 3	3	3	—
Terminal 4	2	1	2

On the days in question the number of passengers detained at the port pending further examination was:

	April 12	April 13	April 4	Total
Terminal 1	14	17	18	49
Terminal 2	27	62	30	119
Terminal 3	63	57	25	145
Terminal 4	22	8	19	49
Total	126	144	92	362

Without an examination of the files of all the passengers who were detained during the period 12 to 14 April at the four terminals it would not be possible to give the shortest and longest periods of detention.

The time spent in detention at the port awaiting further interview can vary between a few minutes, for example while a telephone call is made and several hours if an interpreter in a little used language has to be contacted and then has to travel to the airport.

No passengers have been detained in hotels on the days in question or, indeed, at any other time. The number of passengers accommodated in hotels, having been given temporary admission, was:

	Number
12 April	30
13 April	38
14 April	26

The cost of this accommodation was £46·65p per person per night. This sum maybe recoverable from the airline when the outcome of the passenger's case is determined.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 96

SESSION 1985-86

21st April—2nd May 1986

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There will, however, be headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one will find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc., under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speakers rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
